In this contest Mr. Untermyer finds himself opposed to the Standard Oil interests, which, according to his own statement, are seeking to retain a grip upon the Mutual Life through its present head, Charles A. Peabody, yet Mr. Untermyer has acted as counsel for H. H. Rogers, vice president of the Standard Oil company. His knowledge of corporation law has often led to his being retained in the defense of corporations; but, on the other hand, he has also been engaged by those who have sought to prosecute corporations which abused their privileges, and he believes many of the evils existing today in connection with trusts and similar combinations can be cured only by government and municipal ownership.
