

Men and Women of Prominence

FREDERICK COLE FAIRBANKS, son of Vice President Charles W. Fairbanks, whose romantic marriage to Miss Helen E. Scott of Pittsburg took his father by surprise, is a lawyer by profession, but is engaged with an uncle in a manufacturing business in Springfield, O. He is twenty-five years old, graduated from Princeton university in 1903 and afterward studied law at the Columbian university in Washington. His bride is the daughter of one of Pittsburg's "Carnegie millionaires," James Scott, manager of the Lucy furnace plant of the Carnegie Steel company. She is twenty-two and is an accomplished musician and a graduate of a private school in Washington. They met some months ago at the house of a friend in Indianapolis, and it was a case of love at first sight. Both families knew of the engagement, but Vice President Fairbanks thought his son ought to wait awhile before incurring marital responsibilities. Young Mr. Fairbanks thought differently, so the couple met at Steubenville, Ohio's Gretna Green, and the knot was tied firmly, but without any fuss or feathers. The couple then went to the bride's home, and they expect to visit Europe on their wedding tour.

Miss Clara Clemens, daughter of Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain), who recently made her American debut as a concert singer, has already sung with much success in foreign countries. She has a fine, thoughtful face and is a girl of much originality, as might be expected of a daughter of the greatest of American humorists. She has studied music abroad under Mariane Brandt, Mme. Blanche Marchesi, Moszkowski and Miss Helen Hope Kirk. She has a contralto voice of a singular sweetness and is a finished pianist as well as singer.

MISS CLARA CLEMENS

Miss Clemens inherits her father's ready wit and his love of pleasant company. In Florence when she was a slender young miss in short dresses she was known along the Arno quays as "La Bella Sigorina" and was almost as much of a celebrity in the town as her distinguished father, who was always lionized when he lived in Europe, in whatever part of it he happened to make his home.

Texas has a woman candidate for congress. She is Mrs. Laura B. Payne of Fort Worth, and she is a candidate for member of the house of representatives on the Socialist ticket. She is the first Texas woman to run for such an office, and she promises that if elected she will do her utmost to put out of business all the grafters she can find. As she is a woman of determination it is expected she will keep her promise if she gets the opportunity. But there's no constitutional obstacle to her taking her seat if she can win an election, but the chances of her being the first woman member of the house of representatives at Washington are said to be small.

Brigadier General George F. Elliott, commander of the marine corps, who has sent ten barrels of oil of citronella to Cuba for the campaign against yellow fever mosquitoes, has been in plenty of fights besides those against insects. He was one of the band of heroes who at Guantanamo during the Spanish war repelled a Spanish attack while they were stark naked, having rushed from the water in which they were swimming at the first sound of firing.

General Elliott is a native of Alabama and entered the marine corps in 1870. He first proved himself a hero in 1875, when he stayed aboard the Monongahela in the harbor of Rio Janeiro, though he could have had leave of absence, Brig. Gen. G. F. Elliott, and devoted himself to helping to quell the outbreak of yellow fever.

While in command of the marine guard of the flagship Baltimore of the Asiatic station in 1894 he marched his guard from Chemulpo to Seoul to protect the American legation at the latter place, the Chinese-Japanese war being in progress and Korea the scene of hostilities. This was a night march of thirty-one miles accomplished in eleven hours. General Elliott commanded the legation guard for three months subsequent to this time.

The scene of hostilities having been transferred, he was ordered with the marine guard to Tientsin, which he helped to protect during the winter. Later on, at the request of Mr. Denby, then American minister at Peking, he acted as aid to that official on the occasion of the first audience ever granted by the Chinese emperor to foreigners. In order to perform this duty General Elliott was compelled to make the trip on horseback, passing through about 25,000 undisciplined Chinese troops, suffering constant insult and running no little personal risk.

Martin F. Ansel, who has won the Democratic nomination for governor of South Carolina, beat eight rivals for the nomination at the primaries. He doubled the vote of his nearest opponent, polling 40,000 votes out of 90,000. In South Carolina the Democratic nomination for the governorship is equivalent to an election. Mr. Ansel is a resident of Greenville. He and Senator Tillman belong to opposite factions. The senator stands for the dispensary system. The voters declared against the latter's ideas on the liquor question, and Mr. Ansel will assume office on a platform favoring local option. The liquor question has been a burning one in South Carolina for years past. Mr. Tillman, both as governor and as senator, has advocated the dispensary plan. There were warm times in connection with the matter while he was at the head of the state government.

Senator Alexander S. Clay of Georgia tells of a negro who was elected a justice of the peace during the reconstruction times. His first case was one where the defendant asked for a trial by jury. The negro justice presided with great dignity while the witnesses were examined and the lawyers summed up. Then everybody waited for him to charge the jury. He did not know what to do. Finally a friendly lawyer leaned over the bench and said: "Charge the jury. This is the time to charge the jury."

The justice arose and looked at the jury. "Gentlemen ob de jury," he said, "dis yer's a mighty small case, an' I'll only charge you all a dollar an' a half apiece."

It is rather a peculiar situation in which Edwin V. Morgan, United States minister to Cuba, now finds himself. Although an American citizen, Charles E. Magoon, is now temporarily governor of Cuba, the theory is that the island is still a free and independent republic. Therefore Mr. Morgan is retained as minister of the United States to Cuba. When Secretary Taft took over the reins of government on the resignation of President Palma the Cuban minister at Washington, Senor Quesada, handed in his resignation, but he was requested to continue the performance of his duties in the post. Now when Governor Magoon in his capacity of ruler of Cuba has a communication to make to the United States he sends it to his secretary of state, who sends it to Minister Quesada. The latter visits the state department and makes known the communication to Secretary Root, who in turn forwards it to the secretary of war, and Judge Taft communicates it to the bureau of insular affairs. The reply of this bureau is made to Secretary Taft, who forwards it to Secretary Root, who communicates it to Minister Quesada, who sends it to the Cuban secretary of state, who reports it to Governor Magoon. Anything communicated by the United States as a government to Mr. Morgan as United States minister at Havana goes through a similar process of red tape, all of this being to keep the feelings of the Cubans from being hurt and to preserve intact the theory that their government is an independent one with which communication must be had according to the usual diplomatic precedents.

It may not be generally known that Richard Croker, who has just sued a London publication for libel on account of things it said about his career in New York, is a good deal of a temperance man. A story is told that shortly after the Democratic success of 1897 in New York a wine merchant, distinguished for his urbanity and frankness which bears testimony to the confidence he had in Richard Croker, his methods, approached Mr. Croker. Some one was in conversation with the Tammany leader.

"It's a mere matter of business," quoth the man of wines, "and I had just as soon state it before our friend here. This is the proposition: No one wants you to actively engage yourself in the business, but if you'll give me permission to use your name as an agent for our wines we'll pay you $35,000 a year."

"I couldn't do that," replied Mr. Croker, while his face clouded. I don't drink myself and wouldn't for all the money you could name be in any way the cause of leading other men to drink—certainly not young men. I want to see men free to do as they please about drink as well as every other proper thing. I might even say with that English bishop that I'd sooner see them free than sober. But I couldn't lend my name to what you ask."

The Children of Royalty

CHILDREN of royalty have high sounding titles and are looked upon with much awe sometimes by their parents' subjects, but they are children just the same. They have stomach aches and they cry, they are naughty, and, yes, they have sometimes to be spanked, just like other babies or small boys and girls. The children of the czar of Russia are just as happy and merry a lot of youngsters as could be found anywhere, and they do not realize that they play, as some one has put it, on the crater of a volcano. Their lives are never safe, but happily they are unconscious of the fact. There are four little grand duchesses, the eldest only eleven years old, and the youngest of the family, the czarowitz, a tot in his third year, called the Grand Duke Alexis, is honorary colonel of a regiment and wears other dignities, but they sit lightly on his infantile shoulders. To see the five little folks at play in the grounds of one of their father's numerous palaces a person would never suppose that they were in any peril or that it takes thirty police officers in private garb to guard the diminutive czarowitz against revolutionists who might seek to take his life in order to prevent his ever coming to sit on his father's shaky throne. Alexis is fond of taking snapshots with a camera. Miss Margaret Eagan is a lady who was six years at the Russian court in the capacity of governess, and she has published a book in which she relates experiences with the children of the czar. She says the Grand Duchess Olga was once awed into good behavior by seeing a policeman taking notes. It happened when the children were out driving with Miss Eagan, and Olga was naughty and would not sit down. Miss Eagan writes: "Suddenly she did so, folding her hands in front of her. In a few seconds she said to me, 'Did you see that policeman?' I told her that was nothing extraordinary and that the police would not touch her. She replied: 'But this one was writing something. I was afraid he might have been writing, 'I saw Olga, and she was very naughty.' I explained that this was very unlikely, but on returning home she made particular inquiries as to whether a policeman came while she was out." As to the little grand duke himself, he takes an original view of many things. He was very angry with David for having killed Gollath. One of the young princes of Europe is little Frederick William, heir apparent to the German throne. His father—the Crown Prince Frederick William of Prussia, oldest son of the German emperor, was married on June 6, 1905, to the Grand Duchess Cecilia of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. The baby prince was born on July 4, 1906, and his birth was heralded throughout Germany by the ringing of bells and salutes of 1-1 guns. If he lives to succeed to the throne he will be called William IV.

A baby of special interest to Italians is the small son of King Victor Emmanuel of Italy and Queen Helena, Crown Prince Humbert, heir to the throne. His title is Prince of Piedmont, and he was born Sept. 16, 1904. He is not a pampered boy, but he has many toys that ordinary youngsters do not have and is the possessor, among other things, of seventeen cradles.

"BIG TIM" AND HIS CLAN.

The Sullivans of the Bowers and their influence in New York. Congressman Timothy D. Sullivan of New York, known in his Bowers district as "Big Tim," is the leader of the Sullivan clan, which, with its followers and allies, was an important factor in the Tammany contingent at the New York state Democratic convention at Buffalo. The Sullivan clan includes, besides the leader, his first cousin, Assemblyman Timothy P. Sullivan, better known as "Little Tim," who is commander of the clan in the absence of the chief: Florence Joseph Sullivan, better known as "Big Florrie," and many other Sullivans, variously employed as district captains of police, contractors, hotel and saloon keepers or in posts of some sort obtained through the political influence of the head of the clan. The gatherings of the clan are not much after the order of the usual political club. No Sullivan addresses another as "Mr. suitman" on these occasions, but as "Big Tim," "Little Tim," "Big Florrie," "Denzie," "Jimmie," "Fatty," etc. "Little Tim," who is a regular Paderewski at the piano, lets himself loose, and the air throbs with the latest Bowery "chunes." There are associate members of the clan, so to speak, who do not bear the honored name of Sullivan, but they are scarcely less loyal in allegiance than though they possessed this patronymic.

Some statistics were once published as to the number of men in the municipal service or that of corporations by grace of "Big Tim" and his allies. The figures were as follows: Street cleaning department, 48; brakemen on railroads, 486; conductors on railroads, 890; inspectors of city departments, 53; officeholders in general, 223.

It is related that once upon a time "Big Tim" aided one of the clan to secure a humble post in the navy department. His seafaring experience was limited, consisting of occasional trips to Coney Island. On watch one night two lights, red and green, the port and starboard lamps of an approaching vessel, bored their way through the darkness. "Hi yoi, ahoy!" he yelled. "What's the matter?" queried the officer of the deck. "What do you see?" "I ain't quite sure," was the reply, "but I think it's a drug store."

THIS TELLS THE STORY!

The following is an extract from a letter just received ordering our "Headache Cure": 56 Charlotte Street, Dorchester, Mass., Oct. 18, '06. Dear Sir— Your "Cure" works wonders for me. It has never failed in a single instance. I am an old chronic subject, 65 years old, and have had these terrible sick headaches ever since I was born. Tried everything for years but have found the remedy in your Waters. Have only two or three serious headaches in the year and if I have your Waters with me I always get immediate relief. Very sincerely, D. W. HOWARD.

Mr. Howard will be remembered as the leader of the Boston Ladies' Orchestra that gave a performance here a few years ago.
