In a few minutes they noticed silver dollars dropping on the straw, and then they became curious and signaled the man at the engine to stop the machine. On looking in the half bushel in which the wheat dropped from the thresher they found gold and silver dollars, and some of the fellows became so excited that they began looking around for fifty-dollar pieces. The mystery of the hour was solved when Mr. Searson felt in his inside coat pocket and found that his pocketbook containing $100 in gold, silver and greenbacks had disappeared. It was then evident that while Mr. Searson had been working around the machine he evidently dropped the pocketbook and it was fed into the thresher with the sheaves of wheat. The strawstack was thoroughly searched and most of the money recovered. A machine that would thresh gold and silver dollars would be in great demand.
