

Mentioned In the Dispatches

CAPTAIN PENDLETON.

THE commander of the battleship Missouri, Captain Edwin Conway Pendleton, who assisted in the relief work at Kingston, Jamaica, under Rear Admiral Davis, has seen service on many stations during his naval career. He is a native of Virginia and is the son of a naval officer, was graduated from the Naval academy in 1867 and was assigned to special duty on the Minnesota for two years. He became an ensign in 1868 and master in 1870. The next year he was advanced to the lieutenant's grade and in 1880 became a lieutenant commander. He became a full commander in 1897 and attained the captain's rank in 1902. He was in command of the Atlanta in 1900 and 1902 and was for several years superintendent of the naval gun factory.

Secretary Elihu Root of the state department, whose visit to Canada has been a theme of international comment, is not a very good subject for the cartoonist. His predecessor, the late John Hay, was fond of caricatures and made a large collection of them, and he could even see the fun of those which made people laugh at his own expense. Secretary Root is a very polished man both in manners and in personal appearance and habits. He is always well dressed and well groomed, but in the accompanying caricature looks quite otherwise. The present head of the state department does not believe that staying at home all the time is essential to a proper discharge of his diplomatic duties. By going to all the countries of South America and treating their public men to good samples of his well known eloquence he made many friends for the governmental and trade policies of the United States among the peoples of the southern half of the new world, and he hoped by his Canadian trip to intensify the feelings of friendship already existing between Uncle Sam and the "Lady of the Snows."

Congressman James Breck Perkins of Rochester, the father of the house resolution to establish a national graduated inheritance tax in accordance with the recommendations of the president, is an instance of the scholar in politics. He is perhaps better known as historian than as statesman, and his researches into French history have made him an authority on the subject. He was recently in the public eye on account of his acting, with Edward M. Shepard of New York, as counsel for the Rev. Dr. Crapsey, who left the Episcopal ministry after a trial on charges of heresy. Representative Perkins was born at St. Croix Falls, Wis., in 1847, but Rochester has been his home during most of his life, and he graduated in 1867 from the University of Rochester, from which thirty years later he received the honorary degree of LL. D. He has practiced law in Rochester since 1868. He spent a half dozen years in Paris engaged in the study of the history of France, and his published works on that subject include "France Under Mazarin," "France Under the Regency," "France Under Louis XV.," and a "Life of Richelieu," as one of the "Heroes of the Nation" series. In some recent remarks in congress Mr. Perkins said: "A job may help the man who gets it, but as a general rule it harms the man who gets it for him. Civil service reform has not in all respects worked beneficially, but for representatives it has been an unmitigated blessing. It has made their lives happier and their tenure of office longer." Mr. Perkins had prepared some figures to show that up to 1869 New York sent 600 representatives to congress and that 400 of them were retired at the end of the first term. In the next twenty years congressional careers were short, but from that time forward, owing to the extension of the civil service and the taking of patronage from representatives, the average official life of congressmen has lengthened until now more than half are in their second terms, while one-twelfth of the New York delegation have served seven terms or more.

JAMES BRECK PERKINS.

The cartoonists have always been fond of picturing James Hamilton Lewis, who used to be a member of congress from Oregon and is now corporation counsel of Chicago. He forms a striking figure, and it is easy by slight exaggeration of his eccentricities of manner or dress to make a good caricature. It was in his second speech in congress that Lewis coined his famous phrase, "Tossellated military straps and gilded society sashpads." His first oratorical duel was with Lemuel Ely Quigg in a discussion over the trusts, and it was then that Mr. Quigg went down under Colonel Lewis' peroration, applying to his opponent the Scriptural quotation, "The ox knoweth his master and the ass his master's crib." Not long afterward Colonel Lewis had a lively clash with Representative

Johnson of Indiana. Mr. Johnson in defending the policy of President McKinley attacked Colonel Lewis' speech, intending to make the latter ridiculous. Mr. Johnson handled the subject with infinite tact, but he found his equal. "If the political death, which some hope for and others fear," answered Colonel Lewis in his politest tones, "should befall the president of the United States those looking for the cause of the demise will find it in the simple elegy, 'Too much Johnson.'"

Theodore P. Shonts, who recently resigned as chairman of the Isthmian canal commission in order to become president of August Belmont's Interborough-Metropolitan transit system in New York, has been regarded as a wonderful organizer. He has had great success in controlling forces of men, and this fact has made him in demand for positions requiring exceptional executive ability. At Panama he gave considerable attention to making the employees contented with their surroundings. In pointing out the necessity of amusement for workers on the canal he once said: "Nothing breaks the health and crows the spirit like monotony. The monotony of every workman's life must be pleasantly varied, or the poor fellow will be unable to work well. A young lady once took a position as governess in a rich New York family. The residence of this family was magnificent. The young lady was especially impressed by the footman who stood in the hall.

THEODORE P. SHONTS.

"This footman was tall and robust and shapely. He wore a glittering livery, with knee breeches and brown silk stockings, and standing in the hall, opening the door or conducting visitors to the drawing room he was a stately and grand and solemn picture. His face was as expressionless as a statue's. He was as stiff and unbending as a lamp post.

"Well, one day in the family's absence the new governess heard downstairs a most hideous din—shouts, yells and shrieks—as though a couple of maniacs had broken loose and fallen to fighting. As she listened nervously a maid hurried upstairs, entered the room and said: "Don't be scared, miss. It's only the footman. When everybody is out he always shouts and bores so. He can't help it. It relieves his feelings."

Speaker Joe Cannon of the house of representatives spent a mirthful day at Coney Island last summer, and the silhouette of him reproduced herewith is a reminiscence of that occasion.

Speaker Cannon one day passed by the luxurious and betabled house restaurant for congressmen to the bare floored little alleyway, with little narked tables of the "Beefsteak John" sort, where the plebeian multitude are unceremoniously fed by hoarse and jostling waiters. The proprietor reached Uncle Joe in three leaps and took him by the arm with intent to steer him into the holy of holies, where the linen napkins are. "Don't," said Uncle Joe, resisting. "I came here on purpose. I am in a hurry, and I want to get something to eat. I can't get it there."

After vain expostulations the proprietor permitted the speaker to sit at a bare table opposite a fat grocer. Every waiter in the place dropped his customers and dashed forward to wait on Uncle Joe, who demanded bean soup and apple pie. Three waiters brought him the soup, two conveyed the pie, and the proprietor himself furnished a glass of water.

"No mystery about it," said Uncle Joe, wiping some pie crumbs from himself with a paper napkin. "I want what I want when I want it, that's a. l., and I wanted to get that soup before sunset."

HARRY K. THAW'S SISTER.

Pittsburg Heiress and Beauty Who is Now Countess of Yarmouth. The Countess of Yarmouth, who came to America to attend the trial of her brother, Harry K. Thaw, for the killing of the architect, Stanford White, was Miss Alice Thaw, and her marriage on April 27, 1903, at her mother's home in Pittsburg to the Earl of Yarmouth was one of the leading society topics of the year.

According to some authorities, it was Harry Thaw himself who brought about the marriage between his sister and George Francis Alexander Seymour, earl of Yarmouth and eldest son and heir of the Marquis of Hertford.

THE COUNTESS OF YARMOUTH.

At any rate, in a signed statement issued after the nuptials the young man now on trial for his life wrote:

"It is a great union—a union between one of the oldest families of England and one of the most prominent families of the United States, if I do say it myself. I am delighted, I feel like a boy out of school. An earl is my brother-in-law. Why shouldn't I be glad?"

The earl had a good many financial troubles in this country prior to his marriage to Miss Thaw. Tailors, landlords and other creditors put him through some rather embarrassing experiences. But a big marriage settlement went with his bride, and it has proved a very convenient asset in keeping up the family estates in England. Mrs. William Thaw at first opposed her daughter's marriage to the earl and sent her away to Florida to get her out of the vicinity of the English lord. The latter pursued her to the sunny southland, on a tip from Harry. It is said, and finally the obstinate parent was won over.

Vulgar Fractions.

Everything that Bobby learned at school he endeavored to apply in his daily life and walk. When his mother asked him if one of his new friends was an only child Bobby looked wise and triumphant.

"He's got just one sister," said Bobby. "He tried to catch me when he told me he had two half sisters, but I guess I know enough fractions for that!"—Youth's Companion.

When the Disease Let Go.

An old man was just recovering from an operation, and as he lay regaining consciousness he heard the doctor say to a nurse regarding some powders to be given him, "If one every hour is too much give him a half one every half hour." The old gentleman raised himself up on his elbow and said:

"Say, doc, that reminds me of a man that had a Newfoundland dog. His wife got so tired of having him (the dog, not the man) track up the floors and porches that finally she made her husband take the dog to town and sell him. That afternoon he returned radiant. 'Well,' he said, 'I've sold him for $25.' 'Good!' cried his wife. 'I can get that hat now.' 'But,' continued the man, 'I bought two puppies with the money.' The doctor looked at the nurse and said: "I think he'll recover." P. S.—He did.—Judge.

Sacred Monkeys of India.

In "Living Animals of the World" some curious stories are told about the habits and characteristics of the monkey tribes. It seems that the entellus monkey is the most sacred of all in India. It is gray above and nutty brown below, long legged and active, a thief and an impudent robber. In one of the Indian cities they became such a nuisance that the faithful determined to catch and send away some hundreds. This was done, and the holy monkeys were deported in covered carts and released many miles off. But the monkeys were too clever. Having thoroughly enjoyed their ride, they refused to part with the carts and, hopping and grimacing, came leaping all the way back beside them to the city, grateful for their outing. One city obtained leave to kill the monkeys, but the next city then sued them for "killing their deceased ancestors."

A Woman's Back

Has many aches and pains caused by weaknesses and falling, or other displacement, of the pelvic organs. Other symptoms of female weakness are frequent headache, dizziness, imaginary specks or dark spots floating before the eyes, gnawing sensation in stomach, dragging or bearing down in lower abdominal or pelvic region, disagreeable drains from pelvic organs, faint spells with general weakness. If any considerable number of the above symptoms are present there is no remedy that will give quicker relief or a more permanent cure than Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It has a record of over forty years of cure. It is the most potent invigorating tonic and strengthening nerve known to medical science. It is made of the glyceric extracts of native medicinal roots found in our forests and contains not a drop of alcohol or harmful, or habit-forming drugs. Its ingredients are all printed on the bottle-wrapper and attested under oath as correct.

Every ingredient entering into "Favorite Prescription" has the written endorsement of the most eminent medical writers of all the several schools of practice—more valuable than any amount of non-professional testimonials—though the latter are not lacking, having been contributed voluntarily by grateful patients in numbers to exceed the endorsements given to any other medicine extant for the cure of woman's ills.

You cannot afford to accept any medicine of unknown composition as a substitute for this well proven remedy of known composition, even though the dealer may make a little more profit thereby. Your interest in regaining health is paramount to any selfish interest of his and it is an insult to your intelligence for him to try to palm off upon you a substitute. You know what you want and it is his business to supply the article called for. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the original "Little Liver Pills" first put up by old Dr. Pierce over forty years ago, much imitated but never equaled. Little sugar-coated granules—easy to take as candy.

Man's Love For Woman.

"If a man loves a woman for her looks he will love her for five years. If he loves her mind he will love her for ten years. If he loves her ways he will love her forever." And every woman believes when she marries that her lover loves her ways.

Kemp's Balsam

Will stop any cough that can be stopped by any medicine and cure coughs that cannot be cured by any other medicine. It is always the best cough cure. You cannot afford to take chances on any other kind.

KEMP'S BALSAM cures coughs, colds, bronchitis, grip, asthma and consumption in first stages. It does not contain alcohol, opium, morphine, or any other narcotic, poisonous or harmful drug.
