CAPITOL PROBERS.

The capitol investigation commission has already found considerable rotterness in the methods employed to construct and "trim" the new State capitol. In their preliminary report submitted the auditors presented conclusive proof of a duplicate payment of $18,000. The commission is of the opinion that this bers of the commission are now satisfied that they will find startling crookedness, so bad that the commission, even if it so desired, could not cover it up. Every possible effort is being made by the ommission to prevent any findings of the auditors becoming public. The taking of testimony will not be started until about the middle of March.
