The Exposition At Jamestown.

O educate along the lines of national history is the great object of the Jamestown exposition. From April 26, when President Roosevelt will press the button, start the machinery and make a speech, to Dec. 1, when the gates will close, the people who visit the show will be

WILLIAM COUPER. kept busy replenishing their stores of historical knowledge, and they will be surprised to find what a multitude of important things have happened in the vicinity of Jamestown island since the little fleet of three ships under Captain Newport landed some passengers on its shores 300 years ago on May 13 next. It was on April 26, 1607, that the Englishmen sailed between the capes which they called Henry and Charles and up the river which they named the James, after the reigning monarch. So April 26 was chosen for the opening day of the exposition, May 13 being designated as the day for the beginning of the great naval display.

Jamestown island, where the English settlers built James fort and James City, afterward called Jamestown, has been deserted for more than two centuries, so it was not a good place to hold an exposition. About all that is there now is the tower of the ruined church which the colonists built in 1620. Jamestown island is about thirty-five miles up the James river and is easily reached by boat from the exposition grounds, which overlook the waters of Hampton Roads about five miles from Norfolk.

The architecture of the buildings is colonial, to conform to the his-

COUPER'S STATUE OF CAPTAIN JOHN SMITH. torical keynote of the exposition. Out into Chesapeake bay from the exposition grounds the United States government has built long piers, inclosing what is to be known as Smith harbor in honor of the gallant Captain John Smith, to whose indefatigable efforts in behalf of the Jamestown colony its preservation was chiefly due. One goes ashore from Smith harbor at Discovery landing and finds himself standing in Raleigh square. Even the exposition playground, which at Chicago was called the Midway Plaisance, at Buffalo the Midway, at St. Louis the Pike and at Portland the Trail, is called here the Warpath in sacred memory of the red men who took to the warpath in war paint, to the great alarm of the colonists.

It was on one of these historic occasions that Captain Smith had a narrow escape from death, and the Indian princess, Pocahontas, who, according to the story, saved his life at the risk of her own, has been commemorated by a beautiful statue, the work of the sculptor William Ordway Partridge. Smith, too, is to be preserved in bronze. His statue is now being cast at the foundry and will be unveiled on Jamestown island in the autumn. The impressive figure, eight feet in height, will be placed on a stone pedestal eleven feet in height, so that it may be seen from the decks of all steamers passing up and down the river. It is the work of William Couper, one of the best known of American sculptors and a Virginian by birth. He is fifty-three years of age and studied as a young man with Thomas Ball, whose daughter be married. For twenty-two years his studio was in Italy, but he now maintains one in New York. Couper doubtable Smith as a courtier, left hand resting on the hilt of his sword and in his right hand holding a book, Captain Smith was one of the most picturesque figures in the history of the colonies. Whatever exaggerations there may have been in his descriptions of his travels, he at any rate rendered the most valuable service to the struggling colony at Jamestown.

SCHURMAN CF CORNELL.

Learned University President and Letter He Could Not Read. President Jacob Gould Schurman of Cornell university was a warm friend of the late Governor Frank W. Higgins of New York and was invited to deliver the principal oration on the character of the departed magistrate at the memorial services recently held in the state capitol at Albany. In the course of his remarks he took occasion to compare the problems of today in our own nation with those which concerned the Roman republic in the times of Tiberius Gracchus and warned statesmen of the present era in the American republic against overstepping constitutional limitations as Graechus did, however righteous the cause in which they may be engaged. President Schurman's language was interpreted by some as referring to President Roosevelt, and as he and the of Cornell since 1892. He once received a letter written in no language with which he was familiar. "Send it to Professor Schmit for translation," he said to his secretary. "I believe it is Persian."

Schmit worked over it for hours before he located the characters. They were Arabic beyond a doubt, but he was not quite sure whether of the thirtieth century B. C. or the third A. D. "I will send it to Oxford for investigation," he reported. The office stenographer, a woman, was curious. "Let me see the funny thing," she begged. It was handed to her, and a moment later she began to laugh. "It's in shorthand," she cried, "Perkins' system!" She translated the last line thus: "Excuse my writing to you in this abbreviated manner, but I've got to catch a train." President Schurman hopes that he caught the train, but Professor Schmit will never forgive the hasty correspondent.
