The Watchman was "off its trolley" in that gypsy story published last week. Did you ever read the story of Ananias? If not, read it and take warning. Keep the gates closed.

Joe Gill caught a pike that measured 21 inches in length and weighed 4 pounds, strong, but he can't plant potatoes. Cal Smith says he can't work them, because he can't tell which way the rows run.

Children's day was observed in the M. E. church on last Sunday and was a most enjoyable affair. Like the little boy that was warming his almost frozen fingers said "they begin to feel gooder and gooder." So I think that each succeeding children's day is gooder and gooder.

The solo by little Miss Margaret Eckenroth and the duet by Mammie and Raymond Snook, little orphaned grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Turner, were exceptionally fine. The church was crowded, much of the standing room was taken. The singers did themselves proud. The preacher was happy and all enjoyed the happy occasion.

Say, Charley, I cut out the little Dutch poem entitled "Von der Porra Coomed," which you printed in the CENTRE DEMOCRAT a few weeks ago, and dropped it in my new poetry machine. After grinding it into pulp, a few turns of the crank brought out the following rhymes in English:

When the preacher comes,
Then the family hums,
The euhre deck is quickly hid,
The Bible is dusted from lid to lid,
And on the stand in the parlor is laid,
And a hymn book, too, by the thoughtful maid
—When the preacher comes.

The children are "hiked" upstairs to stay
Till the preacher goes, if it takes all day;
And not a bit of noise dare they make,
And each one is promised a big slice of cake
—When the preacher comes.

Then for seven long hours the good wife files
Around the hot kitchen, baking pies
And stewing fruits, and berries, and meat,
And twenty odd other things good to eat
—When the preacher comes.

In the barnyard lives a "Cock-a-doodle-doo,"
Born in eighteen eighty-two,
His muscles is dry, and tough and blue,
With an axe his neck is severed in two
—When the preacher comes.

For seven long hours this old "doodle-doo"
On a red hot fire is forced to stew,
But, alas! when they come to sever his joints,
They found him "not done" by 22 points
—When the preacher comes.

But at last 'round the table they all take a seat,
The preacher, as always, says grace before
meat;
And the words so familiar he'll quickly repeat
With his heart firmly fixed on the good things to eat
—When the preacher comes.

Then the dinner progresses with merry good cheer,
With marvelous speed the good things disappear,
Each day for two weeks the remains of the
"Doodle"
Furnished the basis for chicken and noodle
—After the preacher left.
