Daymong monder of The Next Senator From Mississippi. Dalmond mond for any many

THE victory of Congressman John Sharp Williams in the senatorial contest in Mississipnational figure. Although it requires an election by the legislature to make Representative Williams the next senator, the contest was virtually settled by the action of the Democratic voters at the primaries in casing a majority of their ballots for the states. of that and other companies acquired man who has led his party in the house for the past few years. As a member of the "most distinguished de- civil war broke out he went to the liberative body in the world," "John Sharp," as his colleagues call him, will be a type corresponding more to that of days gone by than to the modern business senator who is v so conspicuous in the upper branch of congress. Mr. Williams is not a multimillionaire, and he does not represent "the business interests." He is a lawyer by profession and belongs rather to the old school of statesmanship in which learning and oratory and knowledge of history and literature counted for more than influence in the business and industrial world. Born in Memphis, Tenn., in 1854 and in a home of culture, he was brought up on the Bible, "Pilgrim's Progress," Herodotus, Gibbon, Hume, Macaulay, Shakespeare, Scott, Thackeray and Dickens. His father and mother both died before he was eight years old, his father falling at the head of his regiment at Shiloh. Young Williams' remaining family then took refuge from the advancing Union arms at his dead mother's homestead in the Yazoo delta in Mississippi. He studied at the Kentucky Military institute, at the University of the South, at the University of Virginia and at Heidelberg. He spent several years in Europe and gave especial attention to the study of French, part of the time at the College de France and part of the time in travels on foot among the people. On his return to the United States he was admitted to the practice of law at Memphis and devoted himself to the development of his patrimonial estate in Mississippi. He developed into a keen business man in the management of his plantation. He was planter and lawyer, and meanwhile he was also learning something about the profession of politics. In 1893 he was sworn in as a member of the house of representatives, and in 1904 his Democratic colleagues chose him as the leader of their side of the house. He is known for his level headedness and good humor. His friendships often cross party lines, and there are few Democrats so popular as he on the Republican side.

Congressman Williams was once submitting to an interview and was asked about his library at his home in Yazoo, for everybody knows that he is an omnivorous reader.

"I started," said he, "with what the Yankees left of my father's and grandfather's libraries, and I've been adding a book at a time ever since. When I get lazy those long summer mornings in Mississippi I go in there and flop into my big chair by the window and find any kind of a book, from comedy to tragedy and back again, right within reach of my arm."

"And what kind do you generally reach for?"

"Well, if one of my seven children or my wife or my mother-in-law or one of my six nieces has been very obstreperous I make a haul for Bill Nye or somebody who can make me laugh."

The Mississippi statesman was once engaged in a debate in which reference was made to the sugar tariff.

"Down in Texas, way back yonder in the Lone Star State's early days," said the congressman, "some English noblemen went to visit a rancher. There were no hotels then, and the clubs of the state were in prairie barrooms. The ranchman wished to impress a neighboring saloon keeper with the importance of his visitors. All were lined up before the bar.

"'My lord, I believe you are a marquis in your own country?" asked the host of one of his guests, to impress the saloon map.

"'Yes,' replied the man addressed. "'And, my lord (addressing another), you are an earl at home?"

"Yes. "Then he said: "Jim, these are marquises and earls. What do you think of them? "And Jim said: 'Oh, jump into the river. There ain't but two classes of a hit in England recently at a Fourth men in this place. One is them that of July ball given by the Duchess of takes sugar in theirn and the other is Roxburghe, formerly Miss Goelet, in a them that ain't so particular."

Eckert in this position about five known that Colonel Clowry has some claim to being the first to use wireless pi makes him more than ever telegraphy. Strange to say, his employment of it was as long ago as the period of the civil war. Born in 1839 in Will county, Ill., he entered the employ of the Illinois and Mississippi Telegraph company at Joliet in 1852 as messenger boy, and in the service a thorough knowledge of the telegraphic science of the day. When the

At one time he found himself in slon may be thrown into dungeons command of the lines at a certain point in Missouri, but unable to communicate with the Union forces across the Mississippi owing to the fact that the enemy had cut the wires. The message he desired to transmit was of the utmost importance, says the Saturday Evening Post in relating the story, and could on no acount suffer delay. It was pitchy dark and the rain was descending in torrents, the wind was high and Colonel Clowry conjure no way out of his difficulty. Suddenly he heard the toot of a locomotive on the other side of the river. An idea came to him. Only a short distance from him stood a loco-motive, and, climbing into the cab, he seized the whistle cord and began to jerk it in a manner that made the engineer and fireman think he had gone crazy. There was a series of wild toots such as nobody had ever heard before in the history of railroading, but pretty soon they brought from the other side of the river answering whistles. The operator at headquarters had heard his call and realized that locomotive whistles instead of telegraph keys must be used in the transmission of an important message. At the close of the war Colonel Clowry entered the service of the Western Union and rose to become its head.

[] who and have all it supposed to possess absolute powers, but in reality he controls but a part of the population of his realm. The wild tribesmen under their different chiefs are in continual insurrection, and the present troubles are due to unusual activity on the part of these unruly subjects. In consequence of the barbarous character of these tribesmen travel into the interior of Morocco has been attended with danger and is seldom undertaken by Europeans. Even his shereefian majesty Abdul Aziz, Emir el Mumenin, or lord of the true believers, is not safe from molestation within his domains. He has been accustomed to make a wide detour in the past when traveling between Marrakesh and Fez, his capitals, in order to avoid being set upon and murdered by those who are supposed to yield him loyal allegiance and hold his person in sacred regard. The principal wild tribes are the Riffians and the Berbers. the latter the descendants, as supposed, of the race that inhabited the country in the earliest historical times. The Riffians are notorious brigands and pirates, who never hesitate to cut the throats of any mariners or travelers unlucky enough to be cast upon their coast or to fall into their power. The Berbers of the interior are scarce-and left to rot or be beaten and tortured. It has been said that the Morocco of today is more backward and in a worse condition of corruption and anarchy than the Morocco of 500 years

And yet Morocco has many attractions. Its scenery is picturesque, and the climate of the coast regions is in Breese, daughter of the late W. L. many respects enjoyable, as a range Breese of New York. She made quite of high mountains, covered in some parts with perpetual snow, intercepts the hot air from the desert so that refreshing sea breezes prevail throughout the year. The country is believed to have great mineral wealth, but it is as yet very little developed. Under stable and orderly government such as Egypt is now enjoying the natural resources of the country might be made to provide much wealth and prosperity for its inhabitants, and commerce with Europe and America would thrive. At present travelers in Morocco are chiefly interested in the numerous mosques, in the ancient walls with their curious and sometimes elaborate and artistic decorations and in the strange customs of the inhabitants. Morocco is a land of sloth and decadence, but its very backwardness contributes to its picturesqueness in the eyes of the discerning traveler who can witness in the life around him a replica of that one reads about in Genesis. Essentially the customs of the people have changed little in 3,000 years.

Fez, the holy city of Morocco, with its more than 300 mosques and its strange fanatical observances, is an interesting city to visit, but its Moslem inhabitants have a great prejudice against Europeans, who in consequence seldom gain admission within its gates. The latter are decorated in characteristically beautiful Moorish designs and also in a savage fashion. sometimes by the heads of criminals or of those slain in battle. It is probable that ere many more years have passed Morocco will yield to the influences of twentieth century civilization, and many of the barbarous and at the same time picturesque aspects it now possesses will pass away forever.
