

THE BIRTHPLACE OF IMMORTAL GEORGE

Historic Wakefield Plantation, the Early Home of Washington in Virginia.

Monument Marks the Site of the House, Which Was Burned Long Ago.

THOUSANDS of persons make pilgrimages every year to Mount Vernon, and every schoolboy knows that it was the home of George Washington. But for some reason comparatively little attention has been paid to Washington's birthplace, Wakefield plantation, in Westmoreland county, on the Potomac river. At Mount Vernon one can see the actual house which was so long the home of Washington and his revered wife, and within it and about the grounds of the estate are many things intimately associated with the customs and daily pursuits of its former owner. On the contrary, nothing remains of the house in which Washington was born, as it was burned to the ground over a century ago. At the same time there is a sentimental interest attaching to a spot rendered historic by the occurrence there of so important an event as Washington's birth, and it is appropriate that the associations of the place should be preserved.

Wakefield plantation was known in Washington's time simply as the Pope's creek farm, or the home on Pope's creek. Sometimes it was called the home on Bridge's creek. The farm has been the home of six generations of Washingtons, but early in the last century passed out of control of this famous family. Its present owner, John E. Wilson, has lived on the plantation for over sixty years, his father having bought it in 1846. Curiously enough, Mr. Wilson married a member of the Washington family, Miss Betty Washington, granddaughter of William Augustine Washington, and thus gave the historic spot a mistress related to the man whose birth there made it famous.

The Wakefield plantation was first the home of John Washington. It descended to his son, Captain Lawrence Washington, and next to the latter's son, Augustine Washington, father of President George Washington. Augustine Washington, who died April 12, 1743, left quite a large estate, and different portions of it were given to his children. To George was bequeathed the farm on the Rappahannock. It was Augustine who inherited the part of the estate including the family home. Augustine left the Wakefield plantation to his son, William Augustine Washington, and the latter left it to his son, George Corbin Washington, who sold it in the year 1813. It passed through the hands of various owners previous to its purchase in 1846 by John F. Wilson, father of the present owner.

It is a difficult task to picture how the Washington home looked on that eventful 22d of February, 1732, which marked the arrival of little George. Perhaps the best description of it that can be obtained is that given by Washington Irving, who wrote more than half a century after the house in which the great patriot was born had been destroyed. He said: "This house commanded a view over many miles of the Potomac and the opposite shores of Maryland. It had probably been purchased with the property and was one of the primitive farmhouses of Virginia. The roof was steep and sloped down in low, projecting eaves. It had four rooms on the ground floor and others in the attic and an immense chimney at each end. Not a vestige of it remains. Two or three decayed fig trees, with shrubs and vines, linger about the place, and here and there a flower garden wild serves to mark where a garden has been."

Over the spot where it is supposed the house in which Washington was born stood the national government has now placed a stately monument. George Washington Parke Custis placed a stone marker on the site of the house in 1813, but that disappeared, and for a time there was nothing to indicate the historic character of the place. An agitation against such neglect led congress to take the matter up and provide for marking the spot in a suitable manner. The Society of Colo-

A ruined vault in the graveyard is supposed to contain the remains of John and Lawrence Washington and other members of the family which gave to the world 176 years ago the most illustrious of Americans.

Feb. 15 as the date of their wedding, which comes pretty near being St. Valentine's day. Theodore P. Shonts, who came into the limelight when he was chairman of the Panama canal commission, did not take to the idea of his daughter marrying a foreigner, but he yielded after the French nobleman had waged an urgent suit for the fair Theodora's hand. The bride is known as "Tony" in the family circle. She is eighteen, and he is thirty, and the courtship covered a period of about two years, during which many premature rumors of an engagement were circulated, much to the annoyance of ex-Chairman Shonts, who is reported to have said to inquirers on one occasion: "Oh, bother the duke, I haven't any time for dukes."

CLARENCE HALL.

Government Expert on Explosives and Life Saving Methods in Mines.

The large number of disasters in coal mines in this country in the past few weeks has called special attention to the recommendations of President Roosevelt's annual message to congress respecting the establishment of a bureau of mines and to the report of the geological survey on accidents in coal mines prepared by Clarence Hall, assisted by Walter O. Snelling. Mr. Hall is an expert on methods of preventing accidents and of saving life when disasters occur. At the time of the explosion and fire at the Darr mine in Pennsylvania he went into the

Washington and Fraunces' Tavern

Historic Inn Where the General Bade Farewell to His Officers in New York Restored.

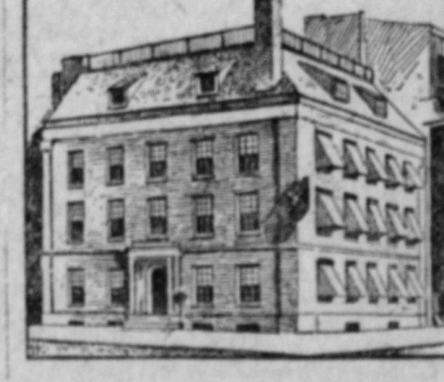

WASHINGTON'S farewell to his officers on Dec. 4, 1793, was one of the scenes in American history that are surrounded with romantic interest. The ceremony took place in the "long room" of the old Fraunces' tavern in New York city, and the one hundred and twenty-fourth anniversary of the event was recently observed by appropriate exercises, chief among them being the formal turning over of the building in which it occurred to its present owners, the New York state branch of the Society of the Sons of the Revolution.

This historic tavern stands at the corner of Broad and Pearl streets. It has been damaged by fire several times since Washington's day and in the course of the changes made in repairing it came to have quite a different appearance from the tavern of 124 years ago. The Sons of the Revolution acquired the property three years ago, and the society has spent $50,000 in rebuilding the structure and making it as nearly as possible like it was in the time of the Revolution, using the original bricks and timber for the most part and following the pictures and descriptions of the tavern as it existed in the eighteenth century. The property cost the society all told about $150,000. This expense was chiefly met through a bequest for the purpose from an ex-president of the New York state branch of the Sons of the Revolution, Frederick S. Tallmadge, and a memorial tablet reciting the fact of his patriotic interest in the preservation of the structure has been affixed to the exterior and was unveiled on the recent anniversary of Washington's leave taking of his officers. Another tablet was unveiled in the "long room" bearing the following record:

"Fraunces' tavern, erected 1719; Queen's Head tavern, 1762; chamber of commerce founded here, 1768; head-

After the dedication of the tablets letters from President Roosevelt and Governor Hughes of New York were read.

Tradition had it that mine host Fraunces was a genial man who attracted to his tavern the important social affairs of the New York of his period. The merchants met here to confer regarding the odious stamp act. The "long room" was the headquarters not only of the chamber of commerce, but of the St. Andrew's society, the governors of the province, the New York society and the Society For Promoting Arts and Agriculture. The wine cellar was once used as a jail where unfortunate malefactors of the days of King George were secretly bottled up to repent of their sins at leisure and amuse themselves by scraping the green mold of the damp floor off their boots. Rusty chains used to confine prisoners hang on the wall.

The tavern will be used henceforth not only as a place of refreshment, but as a historic museum. When the work of restoration was begun it was necessary to turn out certain guests who had lodged there, among them Patsy McGovern, a longshoreman who for thirty-six straight years had been accustomed to hang his jumpers in the same room and who did not want to move. He protested that if George Washington had been living that worthy statesman would not have allowed the tenants to be ejected to make way for a lot of musty relics.

A Nice Distinction. "I fear," said a country curate to his flock, "when I explained to you in my last charity sermon that philanthropy was the love of our species you must have understood me to say 'specie,' which may account for the smallness of the collection. You will prove, I hope, by your present contribution that you are no longer laboring under the same mistake."

Worth Seeing. Mrs. Walker's cook was trying to make her mistress realize what she had missed by not attending the funeral of a prominent citizen of their village. "Mis' Fanny," she said, "you sholy orto hev been thar. I ain' nevrah seen sech a big funeral in dis heah town. Dontcher know dey hed all de keridges fun hofe liberty stables, 'mos' all de private conveniences, an' dat new famby from de nawth was dere in a two horse syringe!"—Lippincott's.

He Only Laughed. "What is the matter, darling?" asked mamma when her small son came to her in tears. "Daddy was hanging a picture, and he dropped it, and it fell on his toe." "But that is nothing to cry about." "I didn't cry. I laughed."
