

WORRIED BY MONEY. SOOTHED BY MUSIC

How Secretary Cortelyou Runs the Treasury Department and Drives Dull Care Away from His Door

Discords of Official Life Forgotten as the Talented Secretary Woos Harmony from Piano and Organ

It has been a strenuous period for George Bruce Cortelyou, secretary of the treasury. Since the beginning of trepidations in the financial world last autumn up to the present time there has not been a day on which he could bid dull care flee away and feel himself at liberty to do a little loafing.

Legislation; he has been harried by the senate over his policy as secretary in the issue of the Panama canal bonds and certificates of indebtedness to relieve the money situation; he has been criticised in the senate for assuming the airs of a president in the manner in which his report on the conduct of his department during the panic was drawn up; he has had to give a great deal of time and thought to the preparation of that report, and to cap the climax he had to do it while suffering from an attack of grip and while reports were flying about that he had had a misunderstanding with the president over his candidacy for the Republican nomination and was about to resign in consequence of it. It was about this time that neighbors of the Cortelyous began to remark that somebody was keeping the piano and organ going a great deal in their home. It appeared that the secretary to distract his mind from the discords of his official life was paying more than usual attention to making harmony in his home. He is very fond of the organ and also plays the piano well. He used to play on the keys of a typewriter. Other people do that for him now, but the keys of the organ and piano possess for him still a great fascination.

Secretary Cortelyou has the reputation of being the silent and serious member of the cabinet and one of its hardest workers. Taft is the joker—not the little joker, either—of the Roosevelt board of advisers, and he is a hard worker, too, despite the fact that fat men are supposed to be lazy. Mr. Cortelyou is generally at his desk long after the subordinates and clerks of the department have left theirs. It is hard work combined with signal executive ability that put Mr. Cortelyou where he is. His genius for hard work has been recognized by three presidents. He was originally discovered by President Cleveland, who took him from the postoffice department to the White House. The first thing the young but aspiring stenographer said was: "You know, Mr. Cleveland, that I am a Republican."

"That doesn't make a bit of difference," characteristically declared the chief executive. And Mr. Cleveland stood by him when Democrats schemed to get his place. Secretary Cortelyou is so saving of words that, it is said, "Good night" is a pretty long speech for him to make. During those strenuous days of last October when Mr. Cortelyou and J. P. Morgan were bossing the emperors, kings and dukes of finance in Wall street he did not have time to do his usual amount of thinking. One day he could not be found anywhere. For four or five hours nobody could get in touch with him. The financiers wondered if he had been kidnaped. The newspaper men exhausted their abilities as detectives in running him down. At last he slipped into his hotel quietly, and it turned out that for hours he had been walking around Central park alone in the dark. In explanation he simply said: "I can think better when walking outdoors."

LIKE FATHER LIKE SON.

The Two Sotherns, E. A. and E. H., as Lord Dundreary.

A leading feature of the dramatic season in New York is the revival of "Lord Dundreary," at the Lyric theater, by E. H. Sothern, who takes the role made famous by his father, the late E. A. Sothern. To the older class of theater goers it seems a case of "Backward, turn backward, O Time, in your flight, to see a Sothern in the role of Dundreary again. E. H. Sothern has made his reputation as an actor in the romantic drama, but he has mastered the humorous role of Dundreary, with all its traditional business, and the stammer and drawl characteristic of the foppish English lord. Some who have seen the revival of the play claim that the elder Dundreary possessed more finish and that his work contained a personal quality the son has not been able to acquire, but this, they say, is not strange, considering that it took the elder Sothern years to build up a creation.

"Lord Dundreary," which was originally known as "Our American Cousin," was the play at Ford's theater, Washington, the night that Lincoln was assassinated, and E. A. Sothern and other noted actors of the time were in the cast. When the Sothern of today produced the play at the capital some weeks ago President Roosevelt expected to witness it. He specially desired to do so, both on account of his interest in the play and on account of his wish to show that there is no superstition in his makeup. However, pressure of official duties prevented his attending it. At the first performance in New York the auditors numbered Professor Henry van Dyke of Princeton and Andrew Carnegie. They visited Mr. Sothern between the acts. In their party was a Scotchman. During the first part of the play the Scot looked on imperturbably and without a smile, but after the scene in which Dundreary tells Georgina how Sam ate his mother-in-law he turned to the others and exclaimed: "Noo I know why they are laughing so. The moon is a fool!"

And Mr. Carnegie and Professor van Dyke agreed to let it go at that.

Many of the jokes and stories in "Lord Dundreary" are so old that for most of the present generation they are new. Among them is a riddle which is older than "How old is Ann?" It runs:

"If fourteen dogs with three legs each can catch forty-eight rabbits with seventy-six legs in twenty-five minutes, how many legs must twenty-four rabbits have to get away from 3,000 dogs with no legs at all?" At the beginning of his present engagement Mr. Sothern offered $200 in prizes for the best answers to the riddle. The answer which won first prize was this: "All bets are off. It is not a bunny-bite race."

The Trouble In Portugal.

A Revolt Against Graft In the Monarchy of King Carlos. The Tobacco Monopoly.

The Fat and Jovial Don Carlos and "Dictator" Franco. Penury of the Royal House.

THE American minister at Lisbon, Charles Page Bryan, recently returned to the capital of Portugal after a trip through the domain of King Carlos and in an interview with a correspondent of the Associated Press said he saw no evidence that the country was on the verge of civil war and revolution. There have been many rumors that a political upheaval was imminent in Portugal. According to the observations of Minister Bryan, the kingdom is in general in a condition of tranquillity. Nevertheless, in the opinion of competent judges of the situation, Portugal is passing through a history making epoch. There has been a revolt against graft, and it is said that until a halt was called in this direction abuses flourished which surpassed even the revelations of similar cities of the United States. The conditions would have soon brought the country to bankruptcy. Among concerns which formed part of the graft system was the tobacco monopoly, and conditions at last became so bad that early in 1906 the people invaded the chambers of parliament, and throughout the land the cry was heard "Down with the tobacco government!" It was then the fat and jovial Don Carlos placed the reins of government in the hands of the so-called "regenerators." The tobacco question was settled, and others came up for treatment in a similar manner. The anger of the people at the conditions existing caused many disorders, and the premier, Rebelo, applied to the king for extraordinary powers, but the monarch saw fit not to confer such powers on either Rebelo or the leader of the opposite party. Instead, he called in Senor Joao Franco, almost an outsider, and gave him the desired unusual powers. He is now spoken of as a dictator, but he claims that his pow ers are exercised with a view of straightening out the financial tangle, abolishing abuses and giving the people an honest and efficient government. He is a Liberal leader, is about fifty years old, is a graduate of the University of Coimbra, where he earned the sobriquet of the "cat killer." He married a Swiss lady and, though wealthy, lives very simply. At Cascaes during the bathing season his residence is a homely villa close to the royal citadel, and its sole luxury is a piano. The political parties and their representatives in parliament had become very corrupt. Although both houses of parliament have been dismissed and no date has been set for new elections and although the most violent of the organs of the antagonistic parties have been suspended, it is said that the people of the country in general do not object so much to the dictatorship of Franco as they did to the rule of graft. Strange conditions have been created in the royal family by the establishment of the dictatorship. For years the royal house has been in such a condition of penury that it has been reduced to all sorts of shifts and expedients. Forty years ago it had to sell the crown jewels and later to mortgage the crown lands. Then the king had to appeal for advances from the treasury. The debt of the royal family to the government was $700,000 when Franco came into power about a year and a half ago. The latter stopped the graft, liquidated the royal debt by decree, increased the civil list and put into operation a system of accountability which would end the practice of making advances to the king. His measures aroused great opposition in many quarters, and the young crown prince, Luiz Philippe, took sides against his father and Dictator Franco. There have been rumors that he has been on this account exiled to the royal hunting lodge at Villa Vicosa. The spouse of Don Carlos, the beautiful, clever and intellectual Queen Marie Amelie, has recently been visiting England to attend the marriage of her sister to Prince Charles of Bourbon. She and the king have never agreed any too well, and in the present crisis she strongly disapproves his policy.
