

A Few Names

Guffey of Pennsylvania—Rear Admiral William S. Cowles and the New Hampshire.

JAMES M. GUFFEY.

THE controversy between William J. Bryan and Colonel James M. Guffey, ex-member of the Democratic National Committee from Pennsylvania, recalls the fact that it was Mr. Guffey who was largely instrumental in bringing about the nomination of Judge Alton B. Parker for president in 1904. Colonel Guffey is one of the best known oil producers in the world. He has been so successful in discovering new oil territory that oil men used to say, "If Jim Guffey dropped out of a balloon he'd light on top of a new oil field." He was instrumental in the discovery of the great Beaumont oil field in Texas. He is interested in gold mines as well as oil, and a Colorado town not very far from the meeting place of the Democratic national convention is named after him. Colonel Guffey is of Scotch ancestry and is descended from William Guffey, who came to America in 1738 and fought at Fort Duquesne.

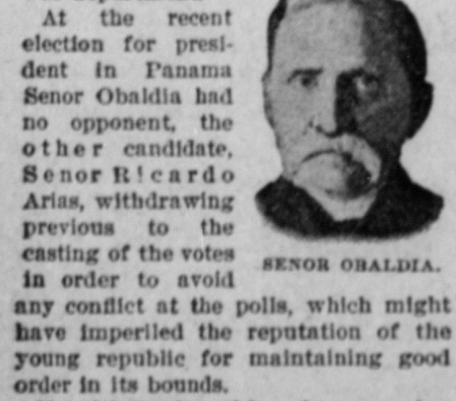

Rear Admiral William Sheffield Cowles, chief of the bureau of equipment of the navy, who represents the United States navy at the Quebec tercentenary, is a brother-in-law of President Roosevelt. His cruise to the waters of the St. Lawrence to participate in the Canadian festivities marks the first important voyage of the battleship New Hampshire, which conveyed him thither. She is the newest, largest and fastest vessel of the American navy now on the Atlantic coast. Admiral Cowles married Miss Anna Roosevelt, elder sister of the president. He was a favorite at the navy department through half a dozen administrations, but has naturally come into frequent notice since Mr. Roosevelt became president. Five years ago this month he celebrated the fortieth anniversary of his entrance into the navy, and he has seen a great variety of service. He was in command of the gunboat Topaka during the Spanish war and made a notable record in connection with the operations against Spanish vessels in West Indian waters. About fifteen years ago he was appointed naval attaché at the United States embassy in London, and it was while serving in this capacity that he met the lady who is now his wife and who was at the time visiting the British capital.

REAR ADMIRAL WILLIAM SHEFFIELD COWLES.

The New Hampshire lay at Newport when Admiral Cowles boarded her previous to the start for Quebec. He was received with honors due his rank. The ship's company was called to quarters, and the rear admiral read his orders from the navy department. His pennant was then run up and saluted. When it comes down the military mast of the New Hampshire after she returns it will not be raised again, as he retires next month. Captain Cameron McR. Winslow is in command of the New Hampshire.

Senator Don Jose Domingo Obaldia, the newly chosen president of the republic of Panama, was minister to the United States from Panama and so is well known at Washington. Judge Taft's first visit to Panama to straighten out differences between the government of the canal zone and the government of the republic was undertaken in his company, and the Latin American diplomat and statesman has always been a warm admirer of the man who won a reputation as secretary of peace while at the head of the war department.

SENATOR DON JOSE DOMINGO OBALDIA.

At the recent election for president in Panama Senator Obaldia had no opponent, the other candidate, Senator Ricardo Arias, withdrawing previous to the casting of the votes in order to avoid any conflict at the polls, which might have imperiled the reputation of the young republic for maintaining good order in its bounds. Notwithstanding this, a large number of voters registered their choice and demonstrated the overwhelming majority of Senator Obaldia's supporters. The elections were carried on in an orderly manner, and Senator Obaldia received all the votes cast.

At the conclusion of the balloting enthusiastic crowds, headed by a band of music, paraded the streets of Panama, cheering continuously for the newly elected president. There appeared to be an absolute lack of ill feeling between the former supporters of Senator Arias and the adherents of Senator Obaldia. Never before had such a friendly spirit been shown so quickly after an election.

It is an interesting coincidence that both the Democratic and Republican on Tip of Tongue

Ambassador O'Brien and His Views—William J. Bryan's Brother Charles—Senator Obaldia.

candidates for president have brothers named Charles and that they were each active in the conventions at Denver and Chicago in behalf of the interests of their respective relatives. Charles P. Taft was a prominent figure in the convention which nominated Judge Taft for president, and Charles W. Bryan was conspicuous at Denver during the preliminaries to the naming of Mr. Bryan for the presidency. Both men are rated as good politicians. Mr.

CHARLES W. BRYAN.

Charles Bryan is not an obtrusive man, but he is not a bit slow in the game of politics despite his seeming modesty and is a pastmaster of conciliation. He tried his hand at this with excellent results during the gathering of the Democrats in Colorado. Mr. Bryan does not greatly resemble his more distinguished brother. He has aided much in carrying out the political plans and policies of the latter and is apt to figure quite a little in the campaign now beginning. He is business manager of Mr. Bryan's paper, the Commoner.

Thomas J. O'Brien, ambassador to Japan, who is home on a leave of absence, is very emphatic in asserting that he has no feelings of hostility toward Americans in the land of the mikado. Congressman Hobson's speech at the Democratic convention predicting war with Japan, the resolutions adopted on the subject of Asiatic exclusion laws by the convention and the report that Brazil is having warships built with the view of selling them to Japan, have combined to renew public interest in the question of our relations with the Yankees of the orient. Ambassador O'Brien said on landing at San Francisco: "So far as my personal experience goes, I have never received the slightest demonstration of ill feeling on the part of the Japanese toward Americans. There is no anti-American feeling. Complaints have been made by Americans that the Japanese management of the Manchurian railroad has indulged in a system of robbing and of rebating detrimental to American traders. The Japanese do practice rebating, just as we did up to a recent date, but the Americans have not been particularly discriminated against because they were Americans."

THOMAS J. O'BRIEN.

There is a great deal of talk about the reception to be given the fleet. Its coming cannot but help to do a great deal of good for both countries. The Japanese fleet will be mobilized in Tokyo waters all the time of the visit. This action of the Japanese should not be looked upon in any other light than as a courtesy to the visitors. In fact, the visit of the fleet coincides with the period set aside for the annual review of the Japanese warships. England intends to mobilize her ships in Asiatic waters in the same manner when the fleet visits Australia for the purpose of escorting Uncle Sam's fighting machines into Sydney. Speaking of emigration, Mr. O'Brien said he believed that Japan was sincere in its desire to preserve the home policy of discouraging immigration of its citizens to America.

Benjamin F. Butler of Massachusetts was a tireless worker when he started on anything. He and his secretary, Clancy, oftentimes sat in the library until almost daylight when the general wanted to finish up anything. During the night sessions of the senate toward the close of congress a senator called on General Butler one morning at 5 o'clock. The same senator called again when the senate adjourned the following morning at daybreak and found the general and Clancy still at work. "Don't you ever stop?" the senator asked. "No," General Butler said. "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do."

"General, I never knew before just who my employer was," Clancy said, bowing.

THE LATE ELEANOR KIRK.

A Tribute to Her Life and Doctrine by One Who Knew Her.

A notable illustration of her own bright, optimistic philosophy was the late Eleanor Kirk. She advocated steadily the power of an immortal soul to rule its own body and environment. What she wrote and taught may be known from the titles of some of her books—"Prevention and Cure of Old Age," "Perpetual Youth," "Where You Are," "The Bottom Plank of Mental Healing." She held that the Creator desires his children to be and to have all that is good, therefore gave them divine power to lift themselves above the dark, troubled waters of disease, poverty and unpleasant surroundings. The temptation to give down to disease, bodily discomfort and old age is as much to be resisted as yielding to the moral temptation to steal and lie. This inspiring doctrine was what Eleanor Kirk preached and practiced. She did not believe in beginning to die thirty years before your time comes. Therefore Eleanor Kirk lived to the age of seventy-six years, with a mind bright, alert and receptive as it had been when she was twenty. She believed in the power of an immortal soul to manifest even physical comeliness so long as it remains on this earth, and wherever she went strangers always asked, "Who is that beautiful woman with the white hair?"

When at last Eleanor Kirk passed from this life it was not because of sickness or old age, but the result of accident, an injury received in a fall at her home. As the world goes this teacher and practitioner of the cheerful doctrine that in reality all is good had as hard a life as falls to most. At least that was true the first half of it, before she herself had lifted herself out of it. Her maiden name was Ellen Maria Easterbrook. In private life she was Mrs. Ames. Eleanor Kirk was her nom de plume. She was born in Warren, R. I.

She was born, too, with intense feeling and sympathy, a vivid imagination and a gift in the use of language. This naturally fitted her to be a writer, and writer she was from the beginning. She was also a loving, devoted family woman. In the sixties she was left with five little children dependent on her for support. With her pen brave Eleanor Kirk reared and nobly educated these children. She was for a time a reporter and special feature writer on the New York Standard, and John Russell Young was her editor in chief. In all weathers, in all places, all hours of the day or night, Mrs. Ames went wherever her work called her. She went fearlessly and ungrudgingly too. She never stopped for a second to consider whether this or that assignment was suitable for a woman. She just went and fulfilled the task.

One summer when she went by the sea she was in an unusually exhausted state. She always kept a home for her children and attended to her domestic affairs. That summer when she had pulled herself and the family down by the sea and set up housekeeping it seemed to her she had come to the end of her rope mentally and physically. She felt as if she could not go a step further in the doing of two people's work. She was of a deeply spiritual nature, which welled up in her as an intense, living faith in God. In desperate emergencies she always called on the great unseen power for help, and help now, not next week or next year. She told me she always got it, especially as, like the little girl with her prayer, Eleanor Kirk did not "bother God about little things." These she worked out by her own common sense and industry.

On this special occasion, lying upon the sands under the sky, with the sea murmuring around her, she demanded help from the unseen power which she believed in. Instantly the answer came to her in a conviction that she would never have to do regular newspaper work again. It flashed through her consciousness that another means of maintenance would open to her. It did. From that time Eleanor Kirk became a magazine and book writer. Poet she always had been.

She was one of those grand, eternally progressing souls that can throw off and away old, worn-out thoughts, habits and notions and take on always the new and the better as it comes to light. Twenty years ago the variously called new thought, divine metaphysics, mental science doctrine—whatever each one's preference pleases to name it—caught the open mind of Eleanor Kirk. It appealed to her as hardly anything had ever done in her life before. With her perennially youthful enthusiasm she seized upon it and made it her own. She became one of its most eloquent and faithful exponents. Few of the new thought writings are so earnest and impressive as those of Eleanor Kirk. Fifteen years ago, with heart and soul full of things she wanted to say on her own account, she founded Eleanor Kirk's Idea, one of the brightest, cheerfullest, most inspiring little magazines ever published in the interest of the new thought. After thirteen years of a merry, fairly prosperous existence it was discontinued, though Eleanor Kirk continued to write till the last.

She loved all living creatures and sympathized with them. Consequently she drew all to her with the magnetism of white magic. The world this strong, beautiful soul has left will be darker to those who knew Eleanor Kirk.

Let Us Pay for Some Summer Breakfasts

These are Mapl-Flake days—days for a food that doesn't make heat. Please don't go without it. To show you its goodness, we'll pay for the breakfasts next week.

We spend 96 hours to prepare Mapl-Flake, yet flaked foods can be made in one-fourth of that time.

Our wheat is steam-cooked for six hours—cooked in pure maple syrup. Then it is cured for days.

Then each separate berry is flaked as thin as paper, so the full heat of our ovens can penetrate.

Then those thin flakes are toasted 30 minutes in a heat of 400 degrees.

That long process is necessary to perfect digestion. Every food expert knows this.

The particles must be separated, by heat and by cooking, so the digestive juices can get to them.

Otherwise half of the food is wasted. It ferments and irritates the stomach lining.

Even mere economy demands Mapl-Flake—the one food that's all food—the food that will all digest.

To make the best food most delicious, we cook the wheat in pure maple syrup.

We do this to make the flavor enticing, so children will want it. You don't need to urge them to eat it.

If you serve them afterward an inferior food, they'll urge you back to this.

It is well to have it so. For no other cereal—none of the fad foods—is half so good for children as this perfect wheat.

In these hot days, when meat is too heating, Mapl-Flake is most important.

It is the ideal food for summer. It gives the maximum of nourishment, and produces the minimum heat. Comfort and health demand it: Every summer breakfast should consist solely of Mapl-Flake and fruit. A good way to serve them is to mix them together.

One Package Free

We want you to try this ideal food, if only for the children's sake. Try it at our expense. Compare it with fad foods, if you have used them. Judge for yourself which is best. Ask your children their opinions. They are the ones to please. Please send us this coupon—now before you forget it. We will then send you an order, good at your grocer's, for a full-size package free. Then let this perfect food, on your table, argue for itself.

I have never used Mapl-Flake, but if you will send me an order on my grocer for a 15c package free, I shall be glad to try it.
