

attention from the rest of the world, and President Roosewelt's proposed trip to the jungles of its interior to hunt wild animals has caused it to be especially prominent in the public eye at this time. Everybody who he knows about it, and every one who ever hunted bears with the president or has shared in his adventures on such expeditions is supposed to have something to do with his forthcoming hunt in the wilds of the dark continent. Naturalists and ethnologists are headed for Africa in the determination to add their quota to the store of scientific lore by researches the. The remarkable progress that has been made in an industrial way in certain parts of the continent is the subject of innumerable articles in newspapers and magazines, and in general there is an impression abroad that in this part of the world in the near future some of the greatest triumphs of civilization are to

Just at present there is a spirit of gayety among the invaders of the dark continent. They are trying to show that nothing is impossible to the enterprise of the twentleth century, whether it is bagging the fiercest animals of the jungle for amusement venders in America, crossing the deserts in automobiles, harnessing the falls of the Zambezi, scaling the heights of the Ruwenzori or building the Cape to Cairo railway. Conquest of the continent and utilization of its great natural resources must be preceded, of course, by establishment of means of rapid com munication. The "ship of the desert." the camel, must be succeeded by the iron horse, and the chug-chug of the motor vehicle must invade the fastnesses inhabited in the past by lions and tigers and elephants and hippopotami. Already conditions have great ly changed since the days of Livingstone and Stanley, and when President Roosevelt arrives on African soil he will find many conveniences and luxuries awaiting him in the borderland lying between the cities of the coast and the jungles of the interior. Indeed, it begins to look as if the African authorities and railway companies would make the expedition a sort of hunting trip de luxe if they have their way about the arrangements.

To mitigate the fatigue of travel in Uganda the administrators of the Uganda railway are building for the president's party a special train of luxurious observatory, sleeping, dining and reception cars. When he reaches the interior of British East Africa Mr. Roosevelt will camp out in one of the garden spots of the world. Civilization has now penetrated so far into the interior that even in close proximity to the territory where plenty of wild animals abound there are good hotels, excellent food and handy telegraph and cable stations. In German East Africa conditions are somewhat similar. The scenes at a railway station on the German East African Usambara line are different from those one would witness at a railway station in the United States, but suggest that the natives of the dark continent are rapidly accommodating themselves to twentieth century ways. Travel on a parlor car on this line presents scenes, too, that are not lacking in picturesque features. The military element is apt to be much in evidence. and the travelers enjoy wine and song. tobacco and cards as they move swiftly through the lands which were but lately the haunts of the wildest of beasts. One may now roll smoothly at forty miles an hour over country along which Mackay and Hannington tolled painfully but twenty years ago and where the latter fell a victim to the savage king of Uganda, One can travel in a week on commodious steamers cown the river whose passage Stanley made only after many weary months. As for hunting in Africa, that is FRICA is a continent that is com- fast becoming a very popular sport, ing to receive more and more even without the impetus which the proposed trip of the president will give it. One of the greatest of African hunters is F. C. Selous, the Englishman who has given Mr. Roosevelt much advice as to his trip. At the age of twenty Mr. Selous felt the has ever been to Africa is telling what | call of the wild and started for Africa, and for about twenty years he spent his life hunting big game. He made his hunting profitable and in connection with it collected natural history specimens. Mr. Selous served as guide to the British South Africa company in the ploneer expedition to Mashonaland. He fought in the Matabele war and has published many books on Africa.

Even women have taken to hunting in Africa. Two Englishwomen, Agnes and Cecily Herbert, recently went into Somaliland. They wore men's zlothes and shot one rhinoceros, many Hons, leopards, hyenas and jackals and numbers of deer and antelope of various species.

Somaliland is a wild country beyond Abyssinia, to penetrate which requires special permits from the Abyssinian authorities. The two young women went in at the head of a caravan of forty-nine camels, six riding ponies and thirty-five Somalis, but with no white companion. They carried a small arsenal of express and repeating rifles.

Another noted African hunter is an American, William N. McMillan, formerly of St. Louis. It is said President Roosevelt will visit him in the course of his trip. He is a lover of wild places, wild creatures, wild men. A man of wealth, he goes seeking adventure through the African interior with such a caravan as Sheba took to see the glory of Solomon. Friend of Menelik, Abyssinia's king, sometimes resident of London, explorer beyond the Sudan, elephant hunter on the Blue Nile, lord of a manor upon the edge of the jungle in British East Africa, Mr. McMillan is an international

The McMillan place is called Juja farm. It is near Nairobi. This part of the continent is about midway on the east coast of Africa. Here is perhaps the world's greatest big game hunting. On the plateau are the many and beautiful deer for which Africa is famous. In the jungle are the lion, the elephant and the giraffe. In the equatorial rivers the hippopotamus disports, and along the lakes and streams is that ponderous quarry, the rhinoc-

He is making a very active canvass, and on account of Mr. Cannon's national prominence the contest has assumed more than a local importance.

REVOLUTIONARY MEMORIES. Their Revival In the Dedication of the Fort Lee Monument.

The monument at Fort Lee, N. J.,

which was unveiled a short time ago, marks another step in the movement for preservation of the picturesque Palisades of the Hudson, and it serves also to perpetuate the memories connected with the romantic history of this beautiful region. At the unveiling ceremonies George W. Perkins. president of the commission in charge of the Palisades Interstate park, made the announcement that a half million dollars has now been expended in the creation of the park and all of the Palisades and river front from Fort Lee to Nyack have now been purchased for it except one or two parcels, the title for which will be in the commission's hands by next year.

Soldiers of the regular army, civil and Spanish war veterans and sailors and marines from the new battleship New Hampshire took part in the dedication of the monument, which shows a Continental soldier, his musket slung over his shoulder, climbing up the Pall sades, while a drummer boy is alding him. MRS. LEWIS S. CHANLER.

Wife of the Democratic Candidate For Governor of New York.

Mrs. Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler, wife of the Democratic candidate for governor of New York, was Miss Alice Chamberlain of Red Hook, N. Y. Her husband, the present lieutenant governor of the Empire State, is a man whose "vagaries," as they used to be called, have not been very well understood until recently, but to Mrs. Chanler they were never so much of a mystery. She could appreciate why he was so much interested in efforts to uplift the downtrodden classes, although him self a millionaire, and why he was willing to work hard to defend the interests of a poor client without expectation of pecuniary reward. It is said that in days gone by Lieutenant Governor Chanler was so deeply engrossed in his study of social problems and the welfare of the masses that he took little thought as to his appearance and went around in clothes that never fitted and seemed to belong to some one else, though the immaculate condition of his linen and his general air stamped him as a man of breeding and refinement. Mrs. Chanler has induced him to give more attention to such details as those of personal attire than he formerly gave. Their marriage took place in 1890.

The Democratic candidate and his wife have a beautiful country estate at Red Hook, and there are two sons and a daughter in the family.

ABOUT GRASSHOPPERS.

A Menace to Crops When They Appear In Great Numbers.

The boys who walk through the fields and see a few grashoppers jumping about little think perhaps that creatures apparently so harmless actually eat people out of house and home sometimes in the west. They come in great droves and multiply into greater droves and then overrun the country and eat the crops.

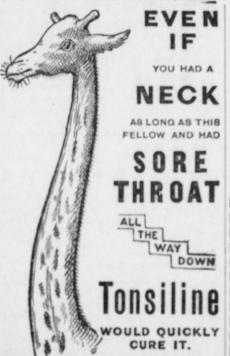

They were so bad in a certain county of Utah a few years ago that they defied all the efforts of the farmers to get rid of them, and the result was that all the crops were destroyed. The following year the farmers adopted a novel means of fighting the pests. They arranged a series of entertainments to be given in the several towns of the county, admission to which might be had on presentation at the door of a half bushel of grasshoppers as a "ticket"—dead grasshoppers, of course.

The notion caught and spread like a prairie fire, and at the first entertainment 150 people appeared, each with a half bushel of the pests. That county saved its crops.
