

Noted Names of Politics

John A. Johnson's Third Election as Governor—Judson Harmon's Election as Governor of Ohio.

JUDSON HARMON, ident Cleveland and served in this capacity from 1895 to 1897. He is a native of Ohio, is sixty-two years of age and is the son of a Baptist minister. His academic education was obtained at Denison university, where he was graduated in 1866 and from which he received the degree of LL. D. in 1892.

In 1878 he was elected to the superior court in Cincinnati and was re-elected in 1883, serving until 1887, when he resigned. As attorney general he succeeded Richard Olney, who had been made secretary of state. Many important cases were argued by Mr. Harmon before the supreme court of the United States, and some of his opinions and papers are regarded as of much weight. On retirement from office Mr. Harmon resumed his private practice in Cincinnati. He has been frequently mentioned as a possible presidential candidate.

The adjoining states of Iowa and Nebraska have elected governors of opposite political faiths this year, although ordinarily both states are Republican. The successful candidate for governor in Iowa is the Republican nominee, B. F. Carroll. In Nebraska, where the popularity of Mr. Bryan helped to swing the state into the Democratic column, the nominee of that party, Ashton C. Shallenberger, was elected. He was the candidate of the fusion forces two years ago, has served in

B. F. CARROLL—A. C. SHALLENBERGER. Congress and has an extensive stock farm. The governor elect was born at Toulon, Ill., in 1862, being one of a family of six brothers and two sisters. He was educated in the public schools of Toulon and later took a degree at the University of Illinois. In 1881 he settled in Nebraska, locating first in Polk county. He married and then moved to Alma.

For twenty-two years Mr. Shallenberger has resided in Alma, where he was one of the pioneers in the stock raising business—in fact, he comes from a race of pioneers. His father's progenitors left Switzerland, where they resided not far from the home of William Tell, and settled in the mountains of western Pennsylvania. He has three children, the youngest a six-year-old daughter, who recently said, "I wish my daddy would hurry up and get this governor he is after 'cause I want him to stay home some."

Joseph G. Cannon, speaker of the house of representatives, against whom the Democrats made a very strong fight in his Illinois district, has not been used to making any special efforts for the retention of his own seat in congress. Generally his principal campaigning has been done in the hallways of his fellow Republican members. This year he was kept busy at home, but with reflection.

Uncle Joe, whether on the stump, in the speaker's chair or in private relations, is never without his appreciation of the humor of a situation. The statesman was discussing with a friend one day the wild doings of a young Chicago man with whom both were well acquainted.

Mr. Cannon's friend was inclined to be very severe in criticism of the sower of wild oats, but the speaker of the house had more to say of his good than his bad qualities, remarking that at heart the boy was "all right." He thought it would be well to reserve judgment and give the lad a chance until he reached the age of discretion. "At just what period would you place the attainment of discretion?" asked the friend quickly. "Generally speaking," added Uncle

The Governors Elect of Nebraska and Iowa—Congressman Hepburn's Defeat—Others in the News.

Joe, "I should say that a young fellow has reached the age of discretion when he removes from his walls the pictures of actresses and substitutes therefor a portrait of his wealthy bachelor uncle."

The record made by John A. Johnson of Minnesota in winning the governorship of the state for the third time, each time by substantial majorities, in two cases in spite of large majorities for the presidential ticket of the opposite party, makes him in many respects a unique figure. Such a record is perhaps without a parallel in the recent history of politics in this country. After his unsuccessful canvass for the Democratic presidential nomination it was Governor Johnson's desire to retire from politics, and the nomination for governor was forced on him in spite of his repeated assertions that he did not wish it.

JOHN A. JOHNSON. In 1878 he was elected to the superior court in Cincinnati and was re-elected in 1883, serving until 1887, when he resigned.

He is a native of Ohio, is sixty-two years of age and is the son of a Baptist minister. His academic education was obtained at Denison university, where he was graduated in 1866 and from which he received the degree of LL. D. in 1892. In 1878 he was elected to the superior court in Cincinnati and was re-elected in 1883, serving until 1887, when he resigned.

As an editor Mr. Johnson made his paper a force in the community. He enlarged and beautified the home in which his mother and her younger children had been so happily maintained. In a few years he brought a charming bride to the old homestead.

One of the familiar faces which will be missing from the next house of representatives in consequence of the result of the recent election in his halliwick is that of William Peters Hepburn of the Eighth Iowa district. He met defeat at the hands of W. D. Jamieson. Mr. Hepburn has been a member of the house for eleven terms, and his first election to his present seat occurred over twenty-five years ago. He is known familiarly to his colleagues as "Pete" and is one of the most picturesque figures in congress. His name was attached to the now famous railroad rate bill, to the bill of the last session amending the anti-trust law and to many other bills which have been much discussed.

Congressman Hepburn was once engaged in an argument on the floor of the house with Representative Russell of Texas. Mr. Russell declared that had it not been for the statesmanship of a Democratic president there would not have been added to this country more than a million square miles of territory.

"But for the same statesmanship of the Democracy the gentleman from Iowa might be a citizen of the French republic and known among his compatriots as Guillaume Pierre Hepburn," declaimed Russell. "Look here!" shouted Colonel Pete. "Don't you call me out of my name!"

President Roosevelt is not above using a little slang now and then, especially in a campaign. On his way back to Washington from Oyster Bay on election day the train stopped at West Philadelphia, and one of a group of dirt begrimed railway mechanics who had congregated on a stone wall near the president's car called out: "Where's the big stick?"

Mr. Roosevelt, who had appeared on the observation platform of his car in response to the cheers, immediately began to laugh and shouted back in response: "No use for the big stick any more, boys."

The president told the men he was glad to see them all. Some one in the crowd then asked: "How is the election going?" To this Mr. Roosevelt gave his latest and concise answer: "We've got them beaten to a frazzle."

ABOUT FAMOUS PEOPLE.

The Troubles of Prince von Bulow. A "Wireless Honeymoon."

That interview which the German emperor gave to an Englishman recently seems to have caused all kinds of trouble. It is declared that Prince von Bulow, the German imperial chancellor, offered his resignation in consequence of its publication. The emperor refused to accept the resignation. The chancellor assumed the responsibility for the interview, though he disclaimed knowledge of what it contained. Emperor William has no more loyal servant than Von Bulow, as is fitting. To which it may be added that no statesman has a more thankless task than that of this same statesman. The prince has received the highest distinction in reaching as he has the rank of chancellor and winning honors and rights of precedence enjoyed by no other nobleman of his country. He is a prince in rank and dignity, his title second only in importance to that of the heirs to the throne who are of blood royal.

Born in Holstein in 1849, Prince von Bulow comes of a long line of men who have helped to make German history. His father was the Prussian minister of state and secretary of state for foreign affairs in the German empire in the days when Bismarck was supreme. His sire was the confidant of the iron chancellor, for many years his right hand man, and Prince von Bulow of today is regarded in diplomatic circles as possessing the Bismarckian theory.

He is a staunch imperialist and an advocate of the necessity for Germany's becoming the foremost military and naval power of Europe.

Mrs. Lee De Forest, who returned recently from a "wireless" honeymoon, did not spend all her time while on her wedding trip spooning with her husband. Not she. The groom in the case, Dr. Lee De Forest, whose wireless telegraph system is now widely used in America and Europe, could not separate his thoughts from his favorite branch of science even on his wedding tour. Nor did his bride want him to do so. She is too much of a scientist herself to be contented long on a mental diet of love and kisses. So Mr. and Mrs. De Forest put in a great deal of their time while in France and Italy in testing new and improved apparatus which it is the inventor's purpose to introduce in his system of wireless communication. As a result of their experiments it is probable that the Eiffel tower in Paris and the Metropolitan Life building tower in New York will soon be connected by a wireless system, and commercial messages may then be sent direct from New York to Paris, and vice versa.

Mrs. De Forest is thoroughly versed in wireless science. Engineering and woman suffrage are the two subjects that interest her most. She was Nora Stanton Blatch, only daughter of Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch and granddaughter of Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who called the first woman's rights convention in 1848, the first ever held in the world. She was graduated from Cornell university in 1902. She took the course in civil engineering and turned to hydraulics as her specialty. For several years she was a hydrostatic engineer with the board of public water supply in New York city, but she got a leave of absence in February last when she married Dr. De Forest.

She is so much interested in the science of wireless communication that she has given up the branch of engineering which was formerly her profession and will devote herself to the pursuits which her famous husband has made his life work.

Educated.

Mrs. S. was in a Richmond hospital, and she was lovely, so welcomed the advent of a very black and very laund maid who came in one morning to wipe up the floor. Some one new to talk to, so no time was lost.

"I have not seen you working around here before. Aren't you a new girl?" Edmonia willingly let the cloth slip back into the bucket and sat flat upon the floor before answering.

"Yas'm, I's new. I's jest washin' up de floor. But I don't work. I's edjicated."

"And where were you educated?" was the next question.

"In a seminary." Then, with a burst of confidence: "There was me an' another girl workin' in a house. She was cook, an' I was chambermaid, an' we had great times about who would git de prize, but I beat." Then, after a pause, "She was easy to beat, 'cause she got smothered to death with gas de night before de 'zaminations come off."—Cleveland Leader.

A Pair of Poets.

Hearing a noise in the street before his house one morning, Robert Browning, the poet, went to his window and saw a great crowd gazing at some Chinamen in gorgeous costumes who were just leaving their carriages to mount his steps. Presently they were announced as the Chinese minister at the court of St. James and his suite. A solemn presentation having taken place, Browning said to the interpreter, "May I ask to what I am indebted for the honor of his excellency's visit?" The interpreter replied, "His excellency is a poet in his own country." Thereupon the two poets shook hands heartily. Browning then said, "May I ask to what branch of poetry his excellency devotes himself?" To which the interpreter answered, "His excellency devotes himself to poetical enigmas." At this Browning, recognizing fully the comic element in the situation, extended his hand most cordially, saying: "His excellency is thrice welcome. He is a brother indeed!"

When the Sun Grows Cold.

Dr. Fridtjof Nansen predicts the fate of the earth in the far distant future, when the sun grows cold. The simple, low organisms, he says, will probably live longest, until even they disappear. Finally, he says, all water on the earth's surface will freeze and the oceans will be transformed into ice to the bottom. Some time later the carbonic acid of the atmosphere will begin to fall on the surface of the earth in the form of snow. Some time after that the temperature on the surface will have reached about 339 degrees below zero F. New oceans will then be formed by the atmosphere being turned into liquid, and the atmosphere that of future earth will be only hydrogen and helium. The sun will continue in its way as a dark star through space, accompanied by the planets.

Her Luck.

By a strange coincidence a much married woman lost three husbands in succession through fatal accidents in the mine. Naturally her case excited much interest, and she had many sympathetic callers, to all of whom she made the same reply. "Ah, yes, it's very hard," she said, "but in the midst of my sorrow I've always had something to be thankful for. None of 'em has handsome lived long after I'd insured 'em, as some poor souls' husbands do!"—London Graphic.
