

HUNTING THE BUFFALO

ON September 1 I determined to take a short trip after bison. At that time I was staying in a cow camp a good many miles up the river from my ranch; there were then no cattle south of me, where there are now very many thousand head, and the buffalo had been plentiful in the country for a couple of winters past, but the last of the herds had been destroyed or driven out six months before, and there were only a few stragglers left. It was one of my first hunting trips; previously I had shot with the rifle very little, and that only at deer or antelope. I took as a companion one of my best men, named Ferris (a brother of the Ferris already mentioned); we rode a couple of ponies, not very good ones, and each carried his roll of blankets and a very small store of food in a pack behind the saddle.

Leaving the cow-camp early in the morning, we crossed the Little Missouri and for the first ten miles threaded our way through the narrow defiles and along the tortuous divides of a great tract of Bad Lands. Although it was fall and the nights were cool the sun was very hot in the middle of the day, and we jogged along at a slow pace, so as not to tire our ponies. Two or three black-tail deer were seen, some distance off, and when we were a couple of hours on our journey, we came across the fresh track of a bull buffalo. Buffalo wander a great distance, for, though they do not go fast, yet they may keep travelling, as they graze, all day long; and though this one had evidently passed but a few hours before, we were not sure we would see him. His tracks were easily followed as long as he had kept to the soft creek bottom, crossing and recrossing the narrow wet ditch which wound its way through it; but when he left this and turned up a winding coule that branched out in every direction, his hoofs scarcely made any marks in the hard ground. We rode up the ravine, carefully examining the soil for nearly half an hour, however; finally, as we passed the mouth of a little side coule, there was a plunge and crackle through the bushes at its head, and a shabby-looking old bull bison galloped out of it and, without an instant's hesitation, plunged over a steep bank into a patch of rotten, broken ground which led around the base of a high butte. So quickly did he disappear that we had not time to dismount and fire. Spurring our horses we galloped up to the brink of the cliff down which he had plunged; it was remarkable that he should have gone down it unhurt. From where we stood we could see nothing; so, getting our horses over the broken ground as fast as possible, we ran to the butte and rode round it, only to see the buffalo come out of the broken land and climb up the side of

It was late in the afternoon before we saw any game; then we made out in the middle of a large plain three black specks, which proved to be buffalo-old bulls. Our horses had come a good distance, under a hot sun, and as they had had no water except from the mud-hole in the morning they were in no condition for running. They were not very fast anyway; so, though the ground was unfavorable, we made up our minds to try to creep up to the buffalo. We left the ponies in a hollow half a mile from the game, and started off on our hands and knees, taking advantage of every sagebrush as cover. After a while we had to lie flat on our bodies and wriggle like snakes; and while doing this I blundered into a bed of cactus, and filled my hands with the spines. After taking advantage of every hollow, hillock, or sage-brush, we got within about a hundred and twenty-five or fifty yards of where the three bulls were unconsciously feeding, and as all between was bare ground I drew up and fired. It was the first time I ever shot at buffalo, and, confused by the bulk and shaggy hair of the beast, I aimed too far back at one that was standing nearly broadside on towards me. The bullet told on his body with a loud crack, the dust flying up from his hide; but it did not work him any immediate harm, or in the least hinder him from making off; and away went all three, with their tails up, disappearing over a slight rise in the ground.

Much disgusted, we trotted back to where the horses were picketed, jumped on them, a good deal out of breath, and rode after the flying game. We thought that the wounded one might turn out and leave the others; and so followed them, though they had over a mile's start. For some seven or eight miles we loped our jaded horses along at a brisk pace, occasionally seeing the buffalo far ahead, and finally, when the sun had just set, we saw that all three had come to a stand in a gentle hollow. There was no cover anywhere near them; and, as a last desperate resort, we concluded to try to run them on our worn-out ponies.

As we cantered toward them they faced us for a second and then turned round and made off, while with spurs and quirts we made the ponies put on a burst that enabled us to close in with the wounded one just about the time that the lessening twilight had almost vanished; while the rim of the full moon rose above the horizon. The pony I was on could barely hold its own, after getting up within sixty or seventy yards of the wounded bull; my companion, better mounted, forged ahead, a little to one side. The bull saw him coming and swerved from his course, and by cutting across I was able to get nearly up to him. The ground over which we were running was fearful, being broken into holes and ditches, separated by hillocks; in the dull light, and at the speed we were going, no attempt could be made to guide the horses, and the latter, fagged out by their exertions, floundered and pitched forward at every stride, hardly keeping their legs. When up within twenty feet I fired my rifle, but the darkness, and especially the violent, labored motion of my pony, made me miss; I tried to get in closer, when suddenly up went the bull's tail, and wheeling, he charged me with lowered horns. My pony, frightened into momentary activity, spun round and tossed up his head; I was holding the rifle in both hands, and the pony's head, striking it, knocked it violently against my forehead, cutting quite a gash, from which, heated as I was, the blood poured into my eyes. Meanwhile the buffalo, passing me, charged my companion, and followed him as he made off, and, as the ground was very bad, for some little distance his lowered head was unpleasantly near the pony's tail. I tried to run in on him again, but my pony stopped short, dead beat; and by no spurring could I force him out of a slow trot. My companion jumped off and took a couple of shots at the buffalo, which missed in the dim moonlight; and to our unutterable chagrin the wounded bull labored off and vanished in the darkness. I made after him on foot, in hopeless and helpless wrath, until he got out of sight.

So far the trip had certainly not been a success, although sufficiently varied as regards its incidents; we had been confined to moist biscuits for three days as our food; had been wet and cold at night, and sunburned till our faces pealed in the day; were hungry and tired, and had met with bad weather, and all kinds of accidents; in addition to which I had shot badly. But a man who is fond of sport, and yet is not naturally a good hunter, soon learns that if he wishes any success at all he must both keep in memory and put in practice Anthony Trollope's famous precept: "It's dogged as does it." And if he keeps doggedly on in his course the odds are heavy that in the end the longest lane will prove to have a turning. Such was the case on this occasion.

Shortly after mid-day we left the creek bottom, and skirted a ridge of broken buttes, cut up by gullies and winding ravines, in whose bottoms grew bunch grass. While passing near the mouth, and to leeward of one of these ravines, both ponies threw up their heads, and snuffed the air, turning their muzzles towards the head of the gully. Feeling sure that they had smelt some wild beast, either a bear or a buffalo, I slipped off my pony, and ran quickly but cautiously up along the valley. Before I had gone a hundred yards, I noticed in the soft soil at the bottom the round prints of a bison's hoofs; and immediately afterwards got a glimpse of the animal himself, as he fed slowly up the course of the ravine, some distance ahead of me. The wind was just right, and no ground could have been better for stalking. Hardly needing to bend down, I walked up behind a small sharp-crested hillock, and peeping over, there below me, not fifty yards off, was a great bison bull. He was walking along, grazing as he walked. His glossy fall coat was in fine trim, and shone in the rays of the sun; while his pride of bearing showed him to be in the lusty vigor of his prime.

As I rose above the crest of the hill, he held up his head and cocked his tail in the air. Before he could go off, I put the bullet in behind his shoulder. The wound was an almost immediately fatal one, yet with surprising agility for so large and heavy an animal, he bounded up the opposite side of the ravine, heedless of two more balls, both of which went into his flank and ranged forwards, and disappeared over the ridge at a lumbering gallop, the blood pouring from his mouth and nostrils. We knew he could not go far, and trotted leisurely along on his bloody trail; and in the next gully we found him stark dead, lying almost on his back, having pitched over the side when he tried to go down it. His head was a remarkably fine one, even for a fall buffalo. He was lying in a very bad position, and it was most tedious and tiresome work to cut it off and pack it out. The flesh of a cow or calf is better eating than is that of a bull; but the so-called hump meat—that is, the strip of steak on each side of the backbone—is excellent, and tender and juicy. Buffalo meat is with difficulty to be distinguished from ordinary beef. At any rate, the flesh of this bull tasted uncommonly good to us, for we had been without fresh meat for a week; and until a healthy, active man has been without it for some little time, he does not know how positively and almost painfully hungry for flesh he becomes, no matter how much farinaceous food he may have. And the very toll I had been obliged to go through, in order to procure the head, made me feel all the prouder of it when it was at last in my possession.

A New Examining.

The recent Legislature passed an act to provide for state registration of nurses, to establish a state board of examiners in connection therewith, and to provide penalties for the violation of certain provisions regarding such registration. Governor Stuart recently appointed the following to constitute the board: Dr. William Higbee, 1703 South Broad street, Philadelphia; Dr. Albert Engles, Blackburn, 3073 Powelton Ave., Philadelphia; Dr. Alice M. Seabrook, Philadelphia; Dr. Womans' hospital, Philadelphia; Miss Roberta M. West, of Erie and Miss Ida F. Giles, of Pittsburgh. The board met in Harrisburg recently and organized by electing Dr. Higbee, president; Miss West, vice president, and Dr. Blackburn, secretary and treasurer. The latter is a son-in-law of Mrs. J. L. Spangler, of Bellefonte, and a descendant of the widely known Dr. Engles, deceased, of Buffalo Run valley.

No More Guessing.

The postoffice department has ruled that all guessing contests, such as naming a number of beans in a bottle, the number of cigars that will be made in a factory, the number of admissions that will be sold at a fair, etc., constitute a lottery and that a newspaper that contains any mention of any such guessing contest cannot be circulated in the mails.

A Splendid Record.

The Lock Haven Normal School has graduated 2200 students and has educated 2500 other young people who are now successful men and women. It has splendid record for thoroughness, discipline and healthfulness. Lock Haven is situated almost in the center of the beautiful West Branch Valley. It is easily accessible. Engine Through Bridge.

A traction engine owned by a man named Chapman above Romola broke through a wooden bridge across Marsh creek at a point about three miles above Romola Friday morning. The engine with a water tank attachment was crossing the bridge when the structure gave way completely, the front of the engine went down and the rear part was up, the thing standing almost on its head, as it were. It was dropped into the stream after much labor which took most of the day and then backed out into a field under its own steam, owing to the low stage of the water, and was little damaged. The bridge is on a public road not much used, and the creek there is small and narrow.

Bryan Tires of the Rumor.

William Jennings Bryan on his arrival in Chicago on Thursday from Bellefonte, O., positively denied a statement attributed to him there that he intended to make his home in Texas.

"I have been annoyed by questions of this sort ever since I bought a little farm in Texas," said Mr. Bryan. "I will make a winter home there perhaps but positively I have no intention of leaving Lincoln or Nebraska. I think this statement should settle the matter. I am a fixture in Nebraska."

Unlawful to Sell Diseased Horses.

Pennsylvania has recently placed herself in line with other states in the matter of progressive legislation affecting the horse. An act went into effect May 6, making it unlawful to offer for sale or sell diseased, lame, or worn-out horses. Provisions are made for its enforcement by policemen, constables, or agents of any anti-cruelty society incorporated in the state.

Modern Rip Van Winkle.

Michael Morrissey, the modern Rip Van Winkle of Cassadra, Cambria county, who never heard of the failure of Gardner, Morrow & Co., bankers, of Hollidaysburg, until 12 years after they closed their doors, will not share in the distribution of the assets. Judge James Shull, of Perry county, specially presiding in Blair, has decided that the statute of limitation, which began to run when the bank closed, cuts him out. Morrissey could neither read nor write but he had $3,000 on deposit drawing 4 per cent. interest, and needed a little money. When he went to the bank he found a clothing store occupying the room.

Put This in Your Hat, Young Man.

Every young man should remember that if his income is just a little above expenses every day he will be eventually well off. If his receipts daily lack a little of meeting his expenditures he will in time become a candidate for public favors at the poor house. Honest work at any calling, and such economy as the case requires is honorable; while idleness and spendthrift habits are a disgrace to anyone, young or old. Young man, go steady.

GOOD HEALTH and PURE FOOD

Nearly every state in the union, as well as the Federal Government, has realized the need, as well as the wisdom, of enacting PURE FOOD LAWS for the protection of the General Health of the public. In these days of ingenuity in all lines of manufacture, the processes for imitating the GENUINE, by placing inferior goods on the market, now have been more widely practiced than in the general line of groceries and Food Products.

Inferior adulterations of all kinds abound. They are, to all appearance, pure and nourishing, but invariably are injurious, and in some cases fatal.

For many years the firm of SECHLER & CO., BELLEFONTE, has been a by-word and a God-send to the housewife for the reason that the name alone always was a guarantee of purity and quality in anything that came from this famous store.

The long experience in this one line enables SECHLER & CO. to buy intelligently and sell reliable groceries to those who appreciate the fact that PURE GROCERIES are the CHEAPEST FOOD, and an assurance of good health to the consumer.

What you buy from SECHLER & CO. is always right and the price consistent every day of the week, and every week of the year.

another butte over a quarter of a mile off. In spite of his great weight and cumbersome, heavy-looking gait, he climbed up the steep bluff with ease and even agility, and when he had reached the ridge stood and looked back at us for a moment; while so doing he held his head high up, and at that distance his great shaggy mane and huge fore-quarter made him look like a lion. In another second he again turned away and made off; and, being evidently very shy and accustomed to being harassed by hunters, must have travelled a long distance before stopping, for we followed his trail for some miles until it got on such hard, dry ground that his hoofs did not leave a scrape in the soil, and yet did not again catch so much as a glimpse of him.
