The Francis Willard Memorial On Sabbath was a pleasing remem-brance of that gifted and self-sacrificing woman, and a good temperance meeting besides. Mrs. R. S. Taylor presided with dignity and efficiency Appropriate songs, recitations and readings were had, with an address by C. M. Muffly. Excellent papers where read by Mrs. John B. Holter, Mrs. F. S. Dunham and Mrs. John Foresman, and Mrs. Viola Hastings who afterwards secured a medical education, died in Williamsport on Tuesread some well-chosen selections. Among those who came from abroad Amerg those who came from acroad to take a part were a delegation of several ladies from Beech Creek, and Dr. Edith H. Schad, of Bellefonte. The audience was a large and appre-

Directors H. C. Holter and Christian Pletcher honored the occasion with their presence.

Among the Sick Mrs. W. T. Leathers is still living, but very low, and her friends find but little in her condition to encourage them. Mrs. J. W. Mayes, Mrs. Thomas E. Pletcher, Mrs. John Holmes and Mrs. J. C. Weirick are all victims of grip in a rather more than usually toona severe form. W. R. Gardner, of the township, is among the "shut ins," Mis

Miss Susan Pletcher's school, the second grade, gave her a genuine surprise on the eve of Washington's birthday, by securing her absence from home and filling the house in her absence with themselves, their friends and the needful good things. Games, recitations and music filled up a most delightful evening, and the little folks went home happy in having proven their admiration and affection for their teacher. The names of the par-ticipants are: Margaret Wyble, Ruth month as a guest of friends in Altoona A large number of persons from a dis-Elmer Hall, Charles Hayes, Willis and Chester Thompson, Ralph and Harold Mayes, Harold and Irviv Pletcher, Gregg Wensel, Gilbert and Willard Neff, Norris Lucas, Paul and Theo. J. Will Mayes gathered up a party of nineteen Presbyterians, including the minister, on Sabbath morning and took them, with his big sled, over the morning service in the old Lick Run church. They were all members of the Lick Run congregation, but having moved to town, and generally having no horses, have not found nor made frequent opportunity for at-tending service there for some time. A delightful social chat was had at the close of the service, and the old church relations strengthened and re-A suspicious moisture was observed in more than one pair of eyes as wishes for a possible return of the good old times of forty and more years ago, when the spacious and venerable building was filled to its capacity every Sabbath, were expressed and reciprocated.

Rev. E. J. Faust, pastor-elect of the Reformed church, preached for his congregation here last Saturday evening and the discourse was very fav-orably received.
