I generally took round through all the taverns, to learn what was going on, and discover if I could, which of the inhabitants had most ready money. According to the talk of those I met with in the tavern, I was led to believe that the three richest men in that part of the country, were a Mr. Sharp, one David After Rich Men's Money.

From information I received I rather con-cluded that the former had more land than money, as I understood he was in the habit of making a purchase of than money, as I understood he was ally overtaken. In pursuance of this premeditated covered scheme, I did meet the old man one spirits. Sunday afternoon as he was returning home from church, but my heart failed me. I took my departure from the cave rather abruptly. leaving behind several articles of value particularly a pair of pantaloons and some blankets. If they have fallen into the hands of any honest people on the Bigspring, I hope they will not claim or use them, but return them to my poor wife in Philadelphia, the first opportunity that offers.

On my return, I again met with my evfl genius Connelly, who renewed the proposition of robbing old James Roop. We made several attempts, but were always baffled. Jonas was in the habit of going to Harrisburg, and staying late in the company of Judge Bucher who living near the bridge, I was to cross over the bridge to the Harrisburg side, and Connelly to remain concealed in a thick covert of woods on the other side, near the road leading to Mr. Roop's house. I dogged him one Saturday evening in particular, and would have robbed him or perished in the attempt, if I had not discovered from his conversation with Mr. Bucher, that he kept no cash or ready money in his house. I had cropt slyly up the bank to the engine house near the bridge, and getting into one of the empty boxes that lie there, I could distinctly hear nearly all that passed without any danger of discovery. Mr. Bucher used to be very impor-made by the family, and I, in particular, was very near being apprehended. After the failure of this attempt, I started for Carlisle early the next morning having first disguised my person as well as I could by altering the ovote for Findley at the election. It is also heard him converse with his son John, and say something about the Governor's Bank Book, which he confessed he did not like, but if Musgrave only continued mum, until after the election. he thought the matter could be smothered and kept secret from the people.

If it had appeared, that Jonas was possessed of a sufficient sum of money to justify the risk, our plan was to seize him after he had crossed the bridge, on his return home, in some suitable part of the road, the most remote from any house, carry him into some thicket of wood, tie him and his which I was confined, I was in this horse to a tree, and procure from him manner liberated, and springing the lock of this door leading into the gence where his money was hid, and lock of this door leading into the gence where his money was hid, and woman's apartment, and the door get some token from him to his family, leading from thence into the yard, as enabling us to deceive them, and carry well as that of the gate opening into the street, luckily I and four other criminals effected our escape undis-from the conversation between him and covered by anybody, about two o'clock Bucher convincing me that Jonas We proceeded about neither carried money about his person half a mile, and finding my hobbles or had any at home, compelled me to troublesome, we entered a pine thicket, abandon the scheme altogether, as

The temptation was too powerful for one in my distressed case to occasion hesitation or delay seizing the valuable prize the first fa-vorable moment that offered. I made the attempt accordingly, as soon as the stillness and darkness of night rendered it safe, but darkness and night do not always afford a cover for crime, or a mantle for iniquity. I was surprised in the attempt to carry it off, was pursued in my flight and finouse and field to field; not believing thing of the kind I had ever witnessed before; for just as I was in the act of clearing the fence, the dog came up. seized me by the shoulders, drew me back, and held me fast until Mr. Reininger arrived, who immediately belab ored me with blows, from the effects of which I did not recover for some time. Not being able to overcome this feeling, and acting under its influence, I concluded upon paying a visit to Carlisle, the place of my nativity once more, before I should quit this part of the country forever, as my intention was to retire to Canada and settle there, after I should see my mother and make preparations for removing my wife and children. Previous to my departure I was engaged in several enterprises of a criminal nature, in some of which we were fortunate, and in others unsuccessful. In the attempt to plunder the house of old Mr. Eberly, and rob him of a large sum of money, which we were told he had in his possession, chiefly in old coins and Spanish dollars, we were surprised in the act, by an alarm made by the family, and I, in parti-
