POTTER TWP.

It has been quite a while since I last visited my hollow tree on Tussey mountain, but I am here again taking observations. My first view shows the improvement made by various persons, Thos. Swartz, J. S. Swabb, A. O. Detwiler, Dan'l Fahringer, W. C. Farner, G. R. Miess, P. B. Jordan, Fred and Boles Brown, C. D. Frazier and others have built extensive poultry houses, and no doubt will do their best to raise as many of the choice breed of fowls as possible, and harvest a large crop of eggs to repay them for their trouble; may they be successful. I also notice that Howard Lingle has been tearing down old buildings and replacing them with new and better ones. G. R. Miess has torn down the old stone building on Zooy husking and removed it to his residence at Colyer and erected it for his large flock of fowls to do business in. George always keeps up with the rest of his neighbors by way of improvement; he is a hustler. A. J. Weaver has removed his blacksmith shop from the hollow tree to his residence, making it more convenient for Gandy Jack to serve his customers.

Some of our farmers are not done sowing yet. J. H. Moyer has been caught by the wet weather with two of his lowland fields; everybody is busy husking corn; it is going to be a good crop.

J. S. Housman had the banner crop of pumpkins—he got five two-horse loads (about seven hundred) from a lot less than one-fourth of an acre; nearly all are good sized ones. Who can beat that? Mr. Housman met with an accident about a week ago. While away to one of his neighbors one evening, when he got his horse to ride home, the horse made a jump just as he jumped for the horse, and threw him off, landing him on his hip and neck on the stones, and twisting out "right shoulder" nearly out of joint, causing a great deal of pain.

In the past week there were two birthday parties. On Wednesday the friends and neighbors of Mrs. Bertha Moyer, about seventy in number with baskets filled with good things to eat, took her by surprise; after explaining the cause for such a crowd, tables were arranged and laden with the goodies, good enough for a king, and of course nothing went to waste, as Mr. H. A. McKelvey and W. J. Woodring were there to take care of that part of it, and they did well. Mrs. Moyer received many presents, some of which were very valuable and appreciated by her. After listening to Mr. Moyer playing the violin and wishing Mrs. Moyer many happy birthday parties they went home feeling happy.

And last, but not least, was Saturday evening, when the neighbors of Mrs. Mary Young took her by storm—it surely was a surprise to her. After greeting one another supper was served to about seventy-five people, and everybody did justice to the good things on the table, but would not touch for them. O. A. Williams and Jacob Moyer were late coming but they made up for lost time. Mrs. Young received many useful presents. Everybody enjoyed themselves. Supper being over and the fragments gathered up, all went home wondering where the next gathering would be.
