another chapter on Indian customs. HOW INDIAN DOCTORS TREATED THE SICK. GAVE HOT AND COLD BATHS. Used Various Roots and Herbs—Their Burial Ceremony—Informal in Declaring War—Weapon of Defense Was Shield. Indian Doctors—Treatment of Sick. The Indians were heirs of diseases. Their general remedy was a sweat. For this purpose they had in every town an oven, situated at a distance from the dwellings, built of stones and boards, covered with sods, and heated with red hot stones. Into this the patient crept naked, and in a short time was thrown into profuse perspiration. As soon as the patient felt himself too hot, he crept out, and immediately plunged himself into a river, or cold water, where he continued about thirty seconds, and then went again into the oven. After having performed this operation three times successively, he smoked his pipe with composure, in many cases a cure was completely effected. Indian doctors never applied medicines without accompanying with mysterious ceremonies. The ceremonies were varied. Many breathed upon the sick. In addition to this they spirited a certain liquor made of herbs, out of their mouth, over the patient's whole body, distorting their features and roaring dreadfully. In some instances the physicians crept into the oven, where they sweat, howled, roared and now and then grinned horribly at the patient, and frequently felt the pulse of the patient. Then pronounced sentences, and foretold either their recovery or death. On one occasion an Moravian missionary was present, who says, "An Indian physician had on a large bear-skin, so that his arms were covered with the fore legs, his feet with the hind legs, and his head was entirely concealed in the bear's head, with the addition of glass eyes. He came in this attire with a calabash in his hand, accompanied by a great crowd of people, into the patient's hut, singing and dancing when he grasped the hand of the air, with a horrid noise, approached the patient and began to play several legermain tricks with small bits of wood, by which he pretended to be able to restore him to health. Their Materia Medica, or the remedies they used in curing diseases, were, rattie snake root, the bark of rattle snake, dried and pulverized, toothache tree, tulip tree, dogwood, wild laurel, and other roots. Death and burials among them, are described by one who spent years among them, as follows: Immediately after the death of an Indian, the corpse is dressed in a new buffalo robe, the face and shirt painted red, and laid upon a mat or skin in the middle of the hut or cottage. The arms and legs of the deceased are then piled near the body. The burying places were some distant from the dwellings. The graves were generally dug by old women. At an early period they used to put a tobacco pouch, knife, gun powder and shot, cloth for clothes, etc., into the graves supposed the departed would have in the next world and occupation in the same souls." At the burial not a man shed a tear; they deemed it a shame for a man to weep, but the women set up a dreadful wail. Their weapon of defence was a shield of the toughhide of a buffalo, on the concave side of which they received the arrows and darts of the enemy, in after years this was all laid aside by the Delaware and Iroquois, but later used bows, arrows, and clubs of war; the clubs they used were pointed with nails—the use of guns came in later, with the hatchet and long knife. The Delaware and Iroquois were very informal in declaring war; they often sent out small parties, seized the first man they met, belonging to the nation they had intended to engage, killed and scalped him, then cleaved his head with a hatchet, which they left stuck in it, or laid a war club, painted red, upon the body of the victim. The Indians' cruelty, when victorious, was without bounds their thirst for blood almost unquenchable. No sooner were terms of peace proposed, than the captives laid down their arms, and delivered the government of the state into the hands of the chiefs. A captain had no more right to conclude a peace, than a chief to begin a war. When the Europeans first commenced colonizing this country, there were eight races, or grand families of Indian tribes, each consisting of minor tribes or nations, living west of the Mississippi, and within the bounds of what is now the States. The largest of these families or tribes were the Algonquins, consisting of many tribes, scattered over the whole of the eastern States.
