

Woman's World

Woman Artist to Complete Work of Edwin Abbey.

MISS VIOLET OAKLEY.

It has come as a surprise to many of the devoted admirers of the late Edwin Abbey to hear that the unfinished work of this master artist is to be taken up by a woman, and a woman who is still to be counted young. But all those who have followed the career of Miss Violet Oakley, the young woman in question, agree that the choice is a worthy one and that no available could better carry out the spirit and the form of Abbey's paintings in the Pennsylvania capitol.

Miss Oakley has already done some notable work on the capitol in Harrisburg, as she was commissioned as one of the mural artists nearly ten years ago, and her series in the governor's room, representing the early history of the state of Pennsylvania, has proved her originality, her poetical conception of the subject and her mastery of technique. This series is in two parts, one treating of the rise of religious liberty, which led to the settling of the state from the Tyndale Bible period to Fox's vision of a multitude, and the other depicting the life of William Penn, showing his youth at Oxford, his conversion to the sect of the Friends, his arrest and imprisonment, his visit of a new colony, his winning of a king's charter and his approach to Philadelphia.

That Miss Oakley is recognized not as a poor substitute for Mr. Abbey, but as a sister artist, is indicated commencing by the fact that she is to be paid exactly the amount promised to the late painter—a rate of $50 a foot.

Miss Oakley was born in New Jersey, but spent a large part of her earlier life in New York city. It was there that she first studied art, taking lessons in the Art League, working for a while under Carroll Beckwith and then going abroad to study further. As masters she had Raphael Collins and Aman Gann at the Academie Montparnasse and Charles Lasar in Sussex. At the end of a year she returned to America and studied at the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia, and it is in Pennsylvania that she has done some of her most successful work. For long her name was associated with those of Jessie Wilcox Smith and Elizabeth Shippen Green, as the three started a picturesque little art colony near Villanova, a suburb of Philadelphia, where they transformed a quaint old inn into a studio.

Royal Love.

There is in the Woman's Home Companion a very personal article about Germany's crown princess, Cecile, who is twenty-five years old and has been the wife of the crown prince for six years. She has four children. Following is a brief extract from the article:

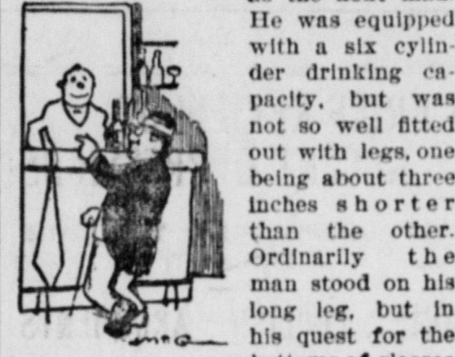

"It was a genuine love match, with a wooing as quiet as might have come any day in any walk of life, he offering his heart to her in a little tea house at Murquitz, quite the most humble, unconventional place that any man could have chosen. The beauty of it is that they are even more deeply devoted today and show it with a frankness that people seldom attribute to royalty. Naive are they, too, in this aspect, as this story, told me by a singer who witnessed the incident, will show. She happened to be singing at a musicale at the Marble palace, the home of the crown prince and princess in Potsdam. When she had finished her, leaning on the piano and looking at her with a boyish smile, said, 'Cecile sings too.' Presently a noted violinist gave his part in the program, and the crown princess, going over to the same singer, said, 'Willy pays the violin too.' Neither had known of the confided compliment to the other. It was merely a little coincidence of spontaneous pride and mutual affection."

For Your Next Lace Yoke.

A woman who always has exquisite lace Irish lace yokes in her gowns and yet who dresses on a limited income told her secret. Instead of purchasing the lace yoke and stock collar attached—that so rarely fits—she watches for sales of turndown collars. Any large Dutch collar can be used back part front and forms a dainty yoke. White stock collars that match sufficiently well can usually be picked up at slight cost, and the combination is good and much more effective than the ready made article.

The Scrap Book

Down and Up and Out. Senator John W. Kern of Indiana tells a story of a friend of his in Indianapolis who liked a drink as well as the next man.

He was equipped with a six cylinder drinking capacity, but was not so well fitted out with legs, one being about three inches shorter than the other. Ordinarily the man stood on his long leg, but in his quest for glasses he played no favorites and stood on either foot. The senator walked into the Denison hotel bar in Indianapolis one day with his friend with the zigzag legs. They called for drinks, and the senator's friend ordered a cocktail while standing on his short leg. While the bartender mixed the drink the man shifted legs and stood on the long leg. The bartender placed the drinks on the bar and looked puzzled. He picked up the cocktail and looked around the bar-room. "What's become of that little runt with the jag that ordered this cocktail?" he asked. The senator's friend got on the water wagon right there. — New York World.

Doing Your Part. If the song I spun of my sadness Has lightened another's pain, Then the hours that I spent in grieving Shall not have been wholly vain. If the song I spun of my gladness Has quickened another's mirth, Then the hours that I spent in laughter Shall have had their bit of worth. If either my joy or my sorrow Has nourished another's heart, Then I in life's clamorous workshop Shall have done my little part. —Charlotte Becker.

A Story of Joe Manley. Chief Justice Fuller of the United States supreme court was on a visit to Maine some years ago and while there was entertained by Joe Manley. Mr. Manley was held in great reverence by his fellow citizens all over Maine and especially in Augusta, his home. He took Mr. Fuller for a drive about the place, but was forced by a pressing business engagement to leave his guest before the drive was finished. When Mr. Manley had disappeared the driver turned to the judge, whom he did not know, and drawing out a cigar, said: "I suppose you don't mind if I smoke. When we are driving Mr. Manley we never light up, because he's rather a distinguished citizen." Fuller repressed a laugh and told the driver to go ahead, which he did. Later the chief justice retailed the joke to Mr. Manley, who at the first opportunity told the driver a few things, winding up, "You miserable three ply idiot, that was the chief justice of the United States."

She Was Lucky. A man who had just come from a visit to a friend's house, where he had seen five ladies engaged in a sociable game of poker, said: "I looked on awhile. Pretty soon one player asked for three cards. They were given her, and she put them with the five she had been given first. She had eight cards in her hand, but didn't notice it until her turn to bet came. Then she said: "'Oh, my hand! I have eight cards.'" "You forgot to discard, dearie," said the dealer. "Throw three of them away."

"Well, let me see which ones I can spare," replied the other. She studied a moment and then discarded three. "Now," she said, "I'm going to bet a dime. I have three aces."

New Kind of Steak. "Once upon a time," says Ople Read, "I was in a sanitarium where it was customary to starve people almost to death in order to make them live. I endured that treatment three days and then sought a restaurant downtown. A waiter came to me, and I said: "I want something to eat. Bring me a steak."

"Been up there?" inquired the waiter, pointing toward the sanitarium. "Yes; three days," I replied. "One sanitarium steak" yelled the waiter. "I sunk disconsolately into a chair, for it seemed that the whole town was conspiring to starve me. But I should have known that there were others who had been there before me. The 'sanitarium steak' was nicely served by the waiter, who cheerfully said: "Here you are, sir; fine sirloin, top cut and extra large." — New York Tribune.

SPOILED A GOOD SCHEME.

If Pete Had Only Had His Own Way It Might Have Won.

Grand Central Pete was a noted bunko stealer of the old days, but he could neither read nor write. Once he fell upon hard times, and he and a younger but equally luckless confidence man undertook to beat their way on a freight train to Washington. A brakeman kicked them off at Trenton.

It was getting late, and neither of them had a cent. Across the tracks from where they had landed was a good looking hotel, and right next door was an express office. Grand Central Pete had an idea. He went into the express office, borrowed one of the large manila envelopes such as are used for transporting currency, filled the envelope with pieces of newspaper cut to the size of banknotes and sealed it carefully.

"Now, then," he said to his partner, "you take your fountain pen and write on the back of that envelope $9,000. Then we'll go over to that hotel and explain that we've lost our baggage, and I'll hand this envelope to the clerk and ask him to lock it in the safe. He'll look at the figures on the back, and he'll take us for moneyed guys and give us rooms and grub until we can raise a stake."

The scheme sounded good to the younger man. He got out his pen and obeyed orders. Grand Central Pete took the envelope back in his hands and examined it carefully. "Does that say $9,000?" he demanded. "Yep," said his partner. "Well, it don't look big enough to me," said Pete. "You'd better add on some more of them naughts."

The younger man protested, but Pete would have his way and kept after him until the educated one had tacked on three more naughts, making the grand total $9,000,000. Then Pete marched grandly over to the hotel, registered for himself and his friend, passed the stuffed envelope across the desk to the clerk and called for the bridal suit.

The clerk took one look at the envelope, another look at the soiled faces and shabby apparel of the newcomers and rang the bell for the house bouncer. A minute later the discomfited pair were sitting on the sidewalk.

Grand Central Pete raised himself painfully and eyed his companion with a scornful, angry glance.

"There, now!" he shouted. "I told you you hadn't wrote enough of them naughts!" — Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

All the Particulars. A blank crop report was sent out by a Cleveland paper for the farmers to fill out, and one of them came back with the following written on the blank side in pencil: "All we've got in this neighborhood is three widders, two schoolma'ams, a patch of wheat, the hog cholera, too much rain, about fifty acres of taters and a darn fool who married a cross eyed gal because she owns eighty sheep and a mule, which the same is me, and no more at present."

Not a Somnambulist. Booth Tarkington, the American playwright and novelist, is a very early riser, and when the English playwright and novelist Arnold Bennett visited him at his charming residence in Indianapolis Mr. Tarkington said the first evening at dinner:

"I believe in the simple life. I get up with the sun. Will you take a ten mile walk with me at 6 o'clock tomorrow morning?" "Thank you, Mr. Tarkington," the Englishman answered, "but I don't walk in my sleep."

A Robust Babe. Sir John Richard Robinson in his "Fifty Years of Fleet Street" tells of an amusing incident during the visit of the Swazi deputation from the Transvaal to England at the close of 1894: "The Swazi braves went to Windsor and had an audience of her majesty Queen Victoria. They were very graciously received. One of their number began to speak, and an interpreter followed him phrase by phrase. 'We come,

O great mother," he said, "to bring to you our babe. Take him, O mother, to thy knees; fold him to thy breast." Here the queen, half frightened, exclaimed: "But where is the child? I don't see him. Where is he?" "Here, O mother," said the Swazi gravely, at the same time bringing forward a big black about six feet high and weighing well over 200 pounds. "He is here."

Tonic Alterative

What is a "tonic"? A medicine that increases the strength or the tone of the whole system. What is an "alterative"? A medicine that alters or changes unhealthy action to healthy action. Name the best "tonic and alterative"? Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the only Sarsaparilla entirely free from alcohol. Ask your doctor about it.

Bilious attacks, sick-headaches, indigestion, constipation, dizzy spells—these are some of the results of an inactive liver. Ask your doctor if he endorses Ayer's Pills in these cases. The dose is small, one pill at bedtime. Made by the J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.
