Breaking It Gently.

On one occasion when a public reception was given to Mr. Gladstone a particularly obsequious old gentleman was introduced to him and forthwith commenced flattering him to such an extent that the late premier grew weary of him, so bidding the man good day he settled down heavily into the nearest chair. The bore, instead of passing on, lingered near and seemed to have something still in his mind, though he looked blissful. Mr. Gladstone observed this and said, not sweetly, "May I ask you, sir, if you want anything more of me?" "Oh-oh, no." said the man, smirking, "only perhaps I may be permitted to remark that I am proud to say that my hat is having the inestimable honor to occupy the same chair with W. E. Gladstone."-London Telegraph.

Nature as a Cook Stove.

Maori housewives of New Zealand have discovered, like their more civilized sisters, the value of the fireless cooker as a labor saver, but their cookers have neither to be made nor ordered. Nature furnishes them in inexhaustible supply, for they are nothing more nor less than the small geysers of the region. Using a box, a basket or a bag, depending on what they are cooking, the women sink the recentacle in the moist mud over a steam hole, which makes an admirable oven. They not only cook their meals, but do their washing in these baby volcanoes.

Seemed Likely.

The young man had gone to the beiress' father-always a ticklish jobbut he took his courage with an iron grip.

"Sir," he blurted out, "I want to ask you for your daughter's hand." The old man, not in the lest disconcerted, said:

"Which band? The one she signs checks with. I suppose?" - London Stray Stories.
