Mílady's Mirror

Hair During Illness,

Whenever a person is ill at home one of the points most likely to be neglected is the care of the hair. In a great many cases women recover from an illness of only a few days to find their hair so snarled and matted that It almost is impossible ever to remove the tangles. If on the first day of an illness the hair is properly taken care of there need be no occasion for this condition. The hair should be parted down the center and braided in two braids. The braids should commence far enough toward the front that the patient will not lie on them when the back of her head is on the pillow. The hair should be combed at least once a day. The patient should lie on her side, and then one-half of the hair can be dressed without any trouble, no matter how sick the patient may be. In combing the hair one should commence at the ends, gradually removing the tangles by working upward. If the hair is grasped by the left hand between the roots and the part being combed the patient will not complain of the pulling.

If the hair is badly tangled olive oil may be applied, which will greatly lessen the labor. Where the matting is extensive it is not best to try to comb out all tangles at once, as it would be too much of a tax on the patient. A few strands can be separated at a time, then braided so as not to become tangled again.

When a patient is compelled to lie in bed for a number of weeks the hair may be washed without much inconvenience and without danger to the patient. The pillow should be well protected by a rubber sheet and the patient moved as near the edge of the bed as possible. Two basins of rather hot water, one containing the shampoo mixture and the other for rinsing. should be in readiness. One side of the hair should be washed at a time. then rinsed well. The hair and scalp may be nearly dried very quickly with several towels. After the shampoo the hair should remain spread out on the pillow for some time until thoroughly dry. A little alcohol may be rubbed into the scalp after rinsing. Care should be taken that the patient is not exposed to a draft for some time. It is in the little details, such as the care of the hair, the teeth and the finger nails, that the thoroughness and training of a nurse are best shown. The finger nails should be given proper care every day as well as the hair, while the teeth need attention several times a day.

Have You a Pretty Back?

The woman is to be pitied who, no matter how beautiful her face or form. lacks the modish back, with its wonderful curves and rounded lines. Of no part of the body is it quite so true that | face." curves are the lines of beauty as it is of the back.

If you chance to possess a back that is all angles instead of curves then it is evident that you must eschew decollete dresses, as for the next few months frocks cut so as to expose a goodly portion of the back will be all the rage.

The back that fascinates the eye is slender, but not thin. It is overlaid with a veiling of firm white flesh. It slopes gently into the waist line by almost imperceptible degrees. Have you such a back, lady fair?

One thing that every self respecting back should have is a dimple in the center of each shoulder blade. If your back is dimpleless it might be a good idea to treat it to a fifteen minute masmage with cod liver oil every night, as this fattening treatment will bring dimples if anything will.

Since the back to be pretty must be white and satiny the wise little maiden scrubs it nightly with a bath brush fairly dripping with hot soda water. What kind of water is this? Simply water to which have been added two heaping tablespoonfuls of ordinary baking soda and a small handful of shredded soay. This simple skin cleans er and whitener does masterly work. Try it and see if you do not agree.

Treatment For Fine Skins.

Some girls have such fine skin that during the cold weather it is necessary for them to wear a veil almost all the time to keep it from chapping. If a protective agent such as powder be used it is absolutely necessary that it be pure, as the more delicate the skin the more care must be exercised in what is used upon it.

The following preparation is most valuable. If properly applied it will protect the skin:

Mix and sift together several times until free from lumps three ounces each of rice flour and rice starch, one and one-half ounces of carbonate of magnesia, one quarter of an ounce of finely powdered orris root, half an ounce of boric acid and ten dreps of essence of rose.

Before applying to the face all the skin should first have a previous application of a thin film of cold cream or almond oil.

For the Gume.

To harden the gums try a wash made of hot water, one pint; borax, one ounce, and a teaspoonful each of spirits of camphor and myrrh. Dissolve the borax in the hot water and let cool before adding the other ingredients.
