The climate was mild and salubrious and one couldn't help but be happy. Mr. James then took me to the lake in his car where his chauffeur was in waiting with a handsome row boat. "Now look out for the surprise," said Mr. James as he called out "here, Darby! Darby!" I saw at about 40 yards distant the water greatly disturbed and in less time than it takes to tell it, a huge fish about five feet in length came close to the boat. "Come up, Darby," said Lew. Then the fish raised his head out of the water and laid it gently on the side of the boat. "There, aint he a beauty? That's my he said as he stroked his shinny head. "Now we'll get the fish." He then told Darby to take us to a school of lake trout. Darby then went to the stern of the boat, raised himself out of the water and threw his two front or dorsal fins on the edge of the boat and with his narrative or (tale) tail rowed us out about two miles where we plunged into a school of the finest lake trout I ever saw. of the finest take trout 1 ever saw.
