Beaver's devotion to duty; "He was a soldler who could be trusted morning, noon, and night." And Major J. Z. Brown of the regiment said: "I never saw a better nor a braver man, and a better man was never in the army than General James A. Beaver." And so the same statement can be made by every member of the regiment.

Engaged in all the battles fought by the army of the Potomac (except Gettysburg by reason of wounds) from Chancellorsville to Ream's Station where he was wounded so as to unfit him for military duty, he closed his active army career by requesting his discharge December 22nd, 1864. On his return home he immediately took up the practice of law with his partner, Hon. H. N. McAllister. Mr. McAllister was a great lawyer and had a large practice. And the now heroic General entered upont he practice of the law with all the zeal, energy and enthusiasm he did into a fight. He was quick to grasp the points in a case however intricate and varied, and press them upon the Court and jury, with all the fervor and intensity of his nature. He soon took rank with the oldest and ablest members of the bar.

As an advocate he had few, if any, equals; possessing a full, clear, strong voice, it was a pleasure to hear him arguing a case to the jury on the facts, or before the Court on the law. While he fought with unusual vigor for his client, he nevertheless, a generous advocate, and never sought to take undue advantage of opposing counsel. Kind and magnanimous in his intercourse with all members of the bar, he was especially so in his treatment of the younger members; always ready to give them not only kindly words, but a helping hand. As a lawyer he was last week.

practice for the position, he at once became one of the most eminent jur-ists of the state. From the first to the last volume of the reports of this Court (being over fifty) his opinions found in each volume, and are are models of judicial learning, couched in pure, strong language, stating clearthe points at issue, and disposing of them in such manner that the conclusions arrived at can never be questioned. As one of his associates expressed it, he had largely the faculty of thinking right. He went at every question with the determination of reaching an honest conclusion. This made him a great Judge, and very useful to the interests of the citizen and the State. He gave himself as devotedly in peace to the service of the Commonwealth, as he heroically served the nation in war.

With all his practice as a lawyer, his duties and burdens as chief exe-cutive of the State, and the service required of him as Judge of one of the Appellate Courts of the State, he in some way found much time to give to the advancement of education, and educational institutions. A trustee since the death of Mr. McAlcompanies, backed by the most prom-inent citizens of his home town and the Governor of the Commonwealth President also of the College, following the death of Dr. Atherton, for about 18 months. Elected a trustee at the man who was universally loved to become Colonel of the 148th Reg't when there were but 25 or 30 students in the College, with no from the State, he lived to see the State annually appropriate hundreds of thousands of dollars to the College, great and varied body grow to over 2,100. On him the honorary degree of L. L. D. was conferred by a number of American colleges, and in 1910 an exceptional honor was conferred upon the University of Edinburg. Scotland, in bestowing on him this degree, an honor rarely bestowed upon an American citizen. One other great trait of the character of our deceased brother remains to be mentioned. In all his career even before he entered the army, this peculiarity was manifested strong personality. It is shown in his letter to his mother before the war broke out, wherein he said: for direction, guidance, and cclear revelation of duty, and I can-not now doubt where duty lies."

He had evidently sought the "Lord in the days of his youth" and in all his life, in whatever condition he was thrown, or by whatever circumstances surrounded he sought wisdom and divine direction in the discharge of al his duties, whether great or small.

In the summer of 1910 he was a delegate from the United States to "The World's Missionary Conference" at Edinburgh, leaving home on the 30th of May and returning about the middle of September of that year, and was recognized as one of the most forceful and best equipped delegates
