A HELPING HAND.

It takes all kinds of people To make a world, they say, And there are all kinds of people In this world of our today.

There are folks who laugh and smile And think this world is great, Others who have no courage But just bemoan their fate.

Some cheer their name on the church roll And all obligations they pay, But when their neighbor needs a friend They look the other way.

They go to church on Sunday All the things they attend, But never can spend an hour With a sick neighbor or a friend.

That we be like the Pharisee God never did intend, But like the good Samaritan A helping hand we lend. We should try to help those who need us, And far as we need not roam, Just remember that old saying "Charity begins at home."
