Opening of Trout Season Brings Catches

termining the number of trout taken the first day, the catch was unusually heavy. Few anglers returned home without at least one or two fish, and many of them caught their limit of ten. Some anglers caught twice that number, but threw the smaller ones back in the stream, keeping only the larger ones.

The lower reaches of Spring Creek, below the trout and bass nurseries, were so crowded with anglers that in some instances fishermen had to wait until others moved to different locations before they could find enough room to throw in a line. Parking space was at a premium and oftentimes the stream was muddied by the wading of anglers through the water, but even under such conditions, trout in large numbers were caught.

Logan's Branch was badly overcrowded, but the catch was heavy. Nearly fifty cars were parked near the Pleasant Gap hatchery as dawn broke and anglers rushed to get a place along the narrow stream. Traffic jams also resulted along the Spring Creek road where parking facilities are limited.

Hundreds of fishermen from Blair and other nearby counties came to Centre county for the first day, while nearly every other section of the state, from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, was represented in the throng of fishermen.

Jack H. Yeager came home after several hours along Logan's Branch with two nice trout. Sparky O'Leary got 2, the largest of which was 15 1/2 inches; John Ammerman, 2, Fred Davis, 2; James Caldwell, Sr.; 7; James Caldwell, Jr.; 7; Earl Lucas, 4; S. H. Poorman, 3; Samuel McKinley, 10; Mrs. Samuel McKinley, 5; Councilman Leslie Thomas, 10; Willis Shuey, an old-timer; 10; Frank Peters, 10; and Joe Campbell, 10. Harold Kirk, 5.

In the Treasury's list of worthy Federal building projects, the Centre Hall postoffice has an estimated limit cost of $75,000. Steadily rising construction costs, however, make it almost certain an allotment for the building at this time would have to be at least five or ten per cent larger.

William Boozer, postmaster at Centre Hall, reported yesterday that up to this time no action has been taken to secure a site for the proposed building. He indicated that there are several available sites from which a suitable one might be selected. The Centre Hall postoffice is now located in the First National bank building.

peace can be brought about only through better understanding between employer and employee." The employer, he believes, should treat his employees more like human beings than mere machines and the employee in turn should think more in terms of co-operation for the betterment of the industry that employs him than in terms of collective bargaining.

That the three great cogs in the national business machine today, capital, labor and government are out of gear was one reason given by Mr. Nicholson for this country being in the depths of the greatest depression in its history, with twelve million bread-winner out of employment and living off the government.

For a period of 20 years or more industry has been preparing for what would have been one of the greatest eras of prosperity this country had ever seen. Millions of dollars were spent in research to develop new industries which when in operation would have taken up the slack in employment.

In concluding his address, Mr. Nicholson said there is a crying need for a feeling of community spirit throughout this country. Charles Miller, manager of Botterf Brothers shoe store, was initiated into membership in the club. Last week Prothonotary Bond C. White was made a member.
