Mix period was chaotic, no centralized government existed, no great national leaders reigned over the country and the people wandered away from

There were various emergencies when the Israelites were threatened by their enemies, at which time a temporary figure would emerge to have been put through the food stand in heroic proportions, under whose influence the danger would be overcome. These leaders were called judges. There were twelve leaders of this type among them being their part to improve the world Ethniel, Ehud, Gideon, Samson and always inspired by a great faith. a woman Deborah.

Deborah's faith in the purpose of God was sufficient to overcome the life. fears which otherwise would have prevented an attack. As the battle developed a storm created confusion in the ranks of Sisera's army and it was entirely routed.

Sisera, the leader of Jabin's soldiers, fled from the battlefield and took refuge in the tent of Heber, the Kennite, who was friendly to Jabin. However, Jael, Heber's wife, killed the trusting leader by treachery. the fact that Deborah hailed this death with triumph and glee illustrates the barbarity of that age many centuries before the religion of Christ began to make even warfare more humane. Yet, it is well to bear in mind, modern wars also have their own atrocities.

Celebrating the victory, we have patriotic than moral and more warlike than religious, but it is well to Scald and peel tomatoes. -of all wickedness and wrong-the stars in their course are fighting against them; the trend and consitiution of things are working steadily and irresistibly for their defeat and overthrow. The universe is so made that it is against all wrong and on the side of right."

The modern reader of this episode may wonder at the storm which aided the Israelites, but history is not without similar incidents. When the huge Spanish Armada sailed to conquer England, a storm contributed more to its defeat than the English ships-as the English themselves said: "God blew upon them and they were scattered." When an early winter insured the defeat of Napoleon's invasion of Russia, the great Frenchman said, "God Almighty has been too much for me." The story of Joan of Arc, the little French peasant girl who left her sheep and flax to don the soldier's armor, and who rescued her France from the invaders, is another example of what a woman inspired by faith in God can accomplish

Other women have likewise done Plorence Nightingale, Jane Adams Deborah was a prophetess, living Evangeline Booth and many others
