Warns of Danger In Water Hemlock

Livestock owners in Pennsylvania are warned by J. Hansell French, State Secretary of Agriculture that water hemlock is extremely dangerous to livestock at this season of the year and urged caution in pasturing animals in low-lying meadows.

Dr. E. M. Gress, State botanist, has traced to this poisonous weed several recent livestock deaths. Cattle will eat it more readily while it is growing and full of sap.

The weed is described in General Bulletin, No. 531, "Poisonous Plants of Pennsylvania," copies of which may be obtained without cost from the Office of Information, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, Harrisburg, Pa.

All parts of water hemlock are extremely poisonous. A piece of the root the size of a pea will kill an adult human being. Cattle have been poisoned by drinking water which stands in little pools where they have been tramped about and crushed some of the water hemlock roots. All farm livestock are susceptible to the poison but is more likely to be fatal to ruminants such as cattle than can empty the stomach by vomiting. The symptoms with poisoned livestock are similar to those given for human beings. The symptoms of poisoning by water hemlock are: Salivation, vomiting (in swine), nausea, colic (in horse), bloating (in cattle), diarrhea, irregular pulse and heart, dilation of pupils, rolling of eyeballs, vertigo, reeling in circles, twisting of neck, falling down, automatic movements of limbs, opening and shutting of mouth, and death, usually within an hour to four hours after first manifestation of symptoms.

Like many wild plants, water hemlock is known locally by many common names, among these are: muskash-root, beaver poison, children's bane, snakeweed, spotted parsley, muskrat weed, cow-bane, and death-of-man.

It is found commonly in meadows, particularly in swampy places along streams.

The clustered roots are thick and fleshy and not very deep in the soil, hence they often become exposed and are picked up and eaten by mistake for parsnips, artichokes, sweet anise or some other edible root.

One of the best distinguishing features of the plant is the swollen part of the stem, commonly called the rootstock. This is the portion just above the point where the clustered roots originate. If this rootstock is split open one will see partitions running crosswise which divide the rootstock into chambers. In the early spring these chambers are filled with a liquid but later they are empty. The stem of the plant which may grow to the height of eight feet is hollow except at the joint where the leaves are attached. It is usually streaked with purple lines. The color is usually more pronounced at the juncture of the stem and branches. The leaves are called bipinnate or tripinnate due to the fact that they are twice or thrice divided. The leaflets are narrow, pointed and rather coarsely toothed.

Uses Rifle to End Life of Self and Dog

report that Dubbs had been despondent for the past week or more, but was unable to assign any reason for his act.
 After Dubbs had left the house last Friday night his mother and brothers heard four shots, the last of which they said, sounded "different." Several of the brothers went about one-fourth mile down a winding lane to the junction with the Bush Hollow road before they came upon the lifeless body of Dubbs. He was lying in a small gully with his gun and the dead dog nearby. His right shoe had been removed, leading to the belief he had used his toes to set off the trigger of the rifle after holding the muzzle against his right breast. The bullet from the rifle, a .32-40 calibre, passed through his right lung and came out in the middle of his back. Powder marks about the wound in the chest indicated the muzzle had been very close when the shot was fired.

Of the four shots heard by the family, only two can be accounted for. One was used in killing the dog, and one caused the death of the man. The other two presumably were wild. On the ground near the body three empty shells were found, while a number of unused cartridges were scattered about as though they had fallen from the box.

In addition to the bullet wound in the chest, examination of the man's body revealed a bruise on the forehead, and cuts on the right temple and lip. These injuries are believed to have resulted when he fell to the ground.

Laurin Dubbs was a twin brother of Orrin Dubbs, of Union township. He was a son of George and Besie Johnson Dubbs and was born at Pleasant Gap on June 29, 1907, making his age at time of death 31 years and 23 days. Surviving are his mother and these brothers and sisters, in addition to the twin brother, Orrin: Andrew, Charles, Ralph, Thomas, Ruth and Roxanna, all at home.

Funeral services were held Tuesday morning from the Bush Hollow church, with the Rev. C. C. Shaver, of Bellefonte, officiating. Interment was made in the Centre Hall cemetery.

NEWS VIEWS PROGRESS MADE IN TELEVISION

Latest developments in television were viewed recently by members of the press in a demonstration by NBC at Rockefeller Center. The demonstration was designed to show the technical progress made in program production during the seven months which had elapsed since the last showing for members of the press.

While no startling innovations have been introduced during the last year, steady advances have been made toward technical perfection of the medium. David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, in reviewing the results said, "Experiments with television in the past eighteen months have improved it by increasing its capabilities and efficiency, thus enabling it to move closer to the inauguration of a television service for the American home."

QUICK-SAND DOES NOT SUCK A PERSON DOWN

It is widely believed that quicksand sucks a victim down into its depths. This is not really so, according to a mineralogist at Rockefeller Center, for it merely holds a victim. The density of quick-sand is greater than that of water and will support the body of a man better than water. It is difficult for us to walk on it because the pressure of our feet causes a person to sink in, then when we lift one leg out we double the pressure on the other. While quicksand does not suck, it does flow readily into a void, so that in trying to lift a foot a partial vacuum is formed about it, and this vacuum has the effect of holding.

Opens Sawmill Near Beech Creek
 Walter Fetterolf of Madisonburg has erected and put in operation a small steam saw mill along State Highway Route 364, about a mile above the Hubbard bridge near Beech Creek. The mill will be used to saw timber cut from the tract owned by William C. Peter. Work at present is on railroad ties. Three sons and a son-in-law of Mr. Fetterolf are employed on the job and several local men.

Poets' Corner

LITTLE SON, LITTLE GIRL

When I hold you to my heart, Little Son
 And I lull you safe to rest, Little Son
 Oh I breathe a little prayer
 As I see you sleeping there
 That you'll never know want or care, Little Son
 You're the sunshine of our home,
 Little Son,
 Where you are no shadows come,
 Little Son,
 Oh we thank the Lord each day
 That He sent you down our way,
 And we hope you're here to stay,
 Little Son
 Oh, I love you too my dear, Little Girl
 And I'm glad that you are here,
 Little Girl
 Oh you are your daddy's pride,
 And no harm shall you bide,
 As he keeps you near his side,
 Little Girl
 With your sparkling eyes of blue,
 Little Girl
 We think all the world of you, Little Girl
 Oh there isn't any other
 Quite so dear to dad and mother
 As you and baby brother, Little Girl
 —Loretta Berger.

OUR BABY

You, who have never been a mother
 Don't know what you've missed,
 Two chubby arms around your neck
 And lips just made to be kissed.
 Skin as soft as velvet.
 Eyes that shine like stars,
 We'd not exchange them for all the gold.
 In this land of ours,
 Tiny little footsteps
 To be guided every day,
 Guarded every minute
 Lest they go astray
 Hurt fingers to be kissed
 Tears to be wiped away,
 And then be rocked to sleep
 At the closing of the day,
 And, as they grow older,
 Day by day, and year by year,
 We almost wish they'd always stay
 Just a baby, dear.

UNIQUE SCHOOL AT SEA

Dr. Lester K. Ade, Superintendent of Public Instruction, today said, an unusual school—one of unique character—a school at sea—is the Schoolship "Annapolis." It is not to be confused with the famous United States Naval Academy in the city of that name; for the school on board the good ship "Annapolis" is conducted by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania solely for the education of pupils from the various counties of the state. Students in this school enroll for the science and practice of seamanship, navigation, and marine engineering; and for advancement as of-
