Patching is like patching a ruined life. Which has become frayed and worn.

Through years of care and strife. If we could make them over new. Without any patch or wedge. For sooner or later we find. They will fray around the edges. To give up old faults and habits is a very hard task. But if some one really tries it is all that we can ask.

We must pin our pattern down. And a lot of traits correct. And put pins where we have. But pins have a nasty habit. To jab when we least suspect. If like a new suit, we all could buy a brand new heart and soul. We'd be so very happy. We wouldn't exchange for the old. -L. S.
