hooks fastened together with points extending outward, Moerschbacher hooked most of the carp from the stream above the High street bridge. The others were taken out below the bridge.

The fish ranged in size from 17 to 22 inches, and weighed from 5 to 10 pounds. As they were pulled from the water they were given to spectators who expressed a desire for them. One of the carp was given to Gottlieb Haag, and according to rumor he traded it for a couple of Christmas neckties. To whom? Just ask "brother" Haag.

After watching Cyril's deft handling of the grapple Tuesday, a reporter for The Centre Democrat decided that if he'd be Moerschbacher he'd stay away from the streams next year, because even if he catches trout legally the average fish warden might still have suspicions.
