Poets' Corner

"AFTER ALL"

It is a funny world, but after all There's always beauty in the Bob White's call; And in a spring that from a mountain flows, Oh what fun when fishing in old clothes! After all there's beauty in the moon, Pleasure in the wind's most mournful tune; God gives us much, and we are thankful for 'The beauty we share in the evening star. For me there's beauty in the sky above, Music in the twitter of a dove; Beauty in the grass that shootin' from the earth, Where lovely posies strive to show their worth. And lest we should forget, our daily bread We're thankful for, and for a clean soft bed; Within a home where love and hope we share, Wherein there's comfort, for our every care. —Bonnie Helen Shoetrom Woodward, Pa.

FISHING CREEK

Clear and cool I was it flowing down between the mountains there, And a whippoorwill was calling, clear on the evening air; Many days I spent beside that babbling brook, Phrasing words of Poesy, that I stored in memory's book. Halos flashed across the Heavens there in crimson bars and streaks, As the sun rose in splendor, behind old Nittany's peak; 'Tis then I dreamed of old philosophers computing time from the stars, Ever wondering if their method was the same that is used in ours. Taking flights like that in Poesy day for day the removal of a growth from his head. Mrs. Sadie Weaver of Colyer is on the sick list. Frank Lingle and his granddaughter Betty of Colyer are visiting this week with his brother in Williamsport. 12,950 Seeds Just Normal Meal For Wild Turkey

That 12,950 seeds are a normal meal for a wild turkey was shown in a turkey crop studied by the Cooperative Wildlife Research Unit at the Pennsylvania State College. Dr. Logan J. Bennett, director of the unit, reported that one of the largest crops submitted for study contained 5,210 grains of wheat and 7,740 of singing nettle seeds. Most of the wheat grains were enclosed in hulls which indicated that they had been dropped during the harvesting of last year's crop, Dr. Bennett said. "Had not the turkey picked them up they would have been wasted."

The crop, which was furnished to the Cooperative Wildlife Research Unit by B. F. Donley of Carmichaels, a student in forestry, came from a turkey shot during the recent season. It weighed approximately six ounces and was 10 1/2 inches in circumference in its smallest measurement and 13 and one-eighth inches in its largest measurement.

The research unit, sponsored jointly by the College, the Pennsylvania Game Commission and the United States Bureau of the Biological Survey, is conducting a year-round study of the food habits of turkeys, ruffed grouse, ring-necked pheasants and bob white quail. Sportmen of the state are cooperating in obtaining crops of the birds for analysis and study.

PERFUME NOW TRAPS VARIOUS INSECT PESTS

A new flower-scented substance developed from petroleum has been found to possess a fascinating effect upon insects, and considerable quantities of it are now being used to flavor the poison bait in western states to combat the hordes of grasshoppers that periodically invade that area, according to the American Petroleum Institute at Rockefeller Center, New York. Like the mythical strains of sweet music that lure men in a dance of death, the new essence derived from petroleum attracts the insects and makes the poison bait highly palatable. The grasshoppers eat with gusto, and soon they have dropped out of the invading hordes that cause millions of dollars of loss to growing crops. The odor is also attractive to other pests in their search for food.

Who perhaps may fall dead, But we drove slowly along, And in the road ahead Stood a man with fright, Who asked us to ride. On that dark, stormy night, He was weak and all in, And the driver of the coal truck, So we thought it all right, Said he, "I left an aged man In the truck in the woods, So I must get repairs, return, As I promised I would, Before dear old Daddy, May die there of fright, I will also take him hot coffee To warm him just right, For he is very aged, you see, And alone in the truck Far back in the wood, Without food or light. So we traveled through the woods As best we could by guess, The snow was getting deeper, But we knew God guided us, As we rounded many curves In the long road leading there, Not a single deer did we see— Not even a straggling hare. At last the town lights, In the distance did appear, Then we all offered up A thankful word of prayer, Our homes we finally reached And all was happy that night, Then I thought of my mother And my promise to write, Now I will drop just a line To tell her of the night We came through the blizzard On the mountain all right. Also thanks for the visit And fine eats they all gave; We ate so much turkey I think It made us all brave. The pies they were delicious, And the ice-cream very good, too, We ate and ate and ate some more.

Explains New Boro Plant

and the Sanitary Water Board was given jurisdiction over pollution of the streams. In 1931 a permit was issued to Bellefonte for sewers to discharge into Spring Creek. This permit required that plans be made of existing and future sewers, and stated that the Board might require the treatment of sewage. The permit expired December 31, 1933, and since then Bellefonte has been discharging wastes into Spring Creek illegally. In 1933, under the CWA, an extension of sewers was begun in Bellefonte, the plans being prepared by H. B. Shattuck, State College, who was then the borough engineer. An application for federal funds in amount of $76,575 was made to build 35,900 feet of sewers. In 1934 another application was made in amount of $65,882. In 1937 the Pennsylvania law permitted boroughs to set up a separate corporation to borrow, build and operate utilities. It was a basic scheme to extend borrowing capacity in the cases of boroughs which had already reached the legal limit, of which Bellefonte was one. The law indicated that certain provisions must be made to repeal. All the while the Sanitary Water Board had been ordering and reordering the borough to install a sewage disposal plant. In the summer of 1938 the borough council set up the Bellefonte Borough Authority to take steps to build a sewage disposal plant and to obey the orders of the Board. The Chester Engineers, a noted sanitary engineering concern, were employed in July and in November a PWA loan was applied for. The Commonwealth approved the project. The bids for the plant totaled $104,945, to which are to be added $12,135 for engineering, legal and other fees. Bonds have been issued, dated January 1, 1939, for $70,000 at 4%. The serial retirement on these bonds begins January 1, 1942 and the retirement is complete January 1, 1969. The PWA application is for $55,800, and will make a total amount of $125,800 available for construction. It is estimated that over 96% of the solid matters will be removed from the sewage. It is claimed by the representative of the Department of Health that there will be a reduction of the mosquito nuisance, inasmuch as the larva feed on the solid particles of sewage waste in the streams. The borough ordinance has been fashioned after the state law, which requires properties to discontinue cesspools and connect to sewers. The sewer rental has been fixed at 50% of the water rate for the property concerned. Three main sewer lines enter Spring Creek. These three will be joined together in a 16-inch line, widening to 18 inches farther down the stream. The sewage, entering through a bar screen, will pass into a de-greasing tank, where the grease will be skimmed off. The matter will then pass into an Imhoff tank, where it will separate into sludge and liquor. This sludge will be pumped to the sludge drying beds. The dry sludge will be disposed of as humus or waste and the liquor treated with chlorine, will be discharged into the creek. The liquor from the Imhoff tank will go into the trickling filter, made of stone ranging in size from 1 to 3 1/2 inches and from the filter to the secondary tank where there will again be a separation of liquor and sludge. The liquor remaining will be treated with chlorine and will then be ready for discharge into Spring Creek. The plant is made to take care of the flood stage of the stream and provisions are made for an increased usage of the facilities with growth of population. Thomas Redding, of Snow Shoe, was a guest of the club.
