GRAVE BELIEVED THAT OF FATHER OF BUFFALO BILL

Public Works Administration engineers on a Leavenworth (Kan.) waterworks project reported to their regional office that the body of a man believed to be James Cody, father of William F. (Buffalo Bill) Cody, was unearthed during excavations.

The iron casket was damaged by a huge plow used in digging on the project. The body, clothed in white Prince Albert coat, white vest and other clothing of a well-to-do man of the nineteenth century, was in excellent state of preservation, the engineers said.

Upon orders of Coroner Ted L. Sexton of Leavenworth, the body was reinterred at Mount Muncie cemetery near Leavenworth.

James C. Davis, Leavenworth undertaker, said it was "entirely probable" that the body was that of the elder Cody. He said the son, Buffalo Bill, had met two visitors to the area to look for his father's burial place.

Isaac Cody, Davis said his (Davis') father had related to him, was a tavern-keeper in Salt Creek Valley, near Leavenworth, during Reconstruction days.

Cody, according to the story, was stabbed by an opponent during a political rally in Salt Creek Valley in 1854, and died of the wound a few years later when his son was only five.
