CONSOLATION

If you meet a little child Who perhaps has stubbed his toe, Stop awhile, console him well, Listen to his childish woe.

As you speak some word of comfort And assuage his fears Like sunshine after rain, He will smile through his tears.

It might be just a little word To him that you will say, But his smile of gratitude Surely will repay.

For no one is immune As on through life we go, Who knows perhaps the day will come When you will stub your toe. L. S.
