Political Echoes As Assembly Ends

mine. To say that many of them are jittery, would be to make an under-statement.

Looking at the situation from a purely political standpoint, the Democrats are quite satisfied with the outcome of the session. They have lost some jobs as a result, but this isn't worrying them too much. They're satisfied that the Republicans in the last few weeks have alienated enough votes to more than offset whatever immediate losses they may have inflicted through riper legislation.

The Republicans didn't write so many laws this session, but they wrote a good many campaign speeches—for the Democrats.

The Democrats won't be worrying about how many jobs the Republicans took away from them when the next campaign gets underway; their offensive will branch out from two main fronts—labor and industry.

Pointing to specific legislation, they enacted or abandoned during the 1939 session, the Democrats will charge:

1. That the Republicans have not kept their promises to industry, but on the contrary have re-enacted the same system of taxation which during last year's campaign they termed "punitive."

2. That labor has been betrayed all down the line by retrogressive laws affecting teachers, miners and working people in general.

The Republicans, in re-enacting the entire Earle Administration tax program for the next two years, have provided the minority forces with plenty of ready-made campaign material. It is not hard to see how the campaign will be conducted on this score; the details will be forthcoming in the very near future.

On the question of labor, the Republicans also have proved helpful to the Democrats. Every Democratic force, quietly gathering material for the first offensive in this year's judicial election, are satisfied that the Administration has incurred the enmity of several large groups: The teachers through enactment of the so-called bi-parliamentary tenure bill; the miners through the determined effort to enact the Kane production-quota bill for the anthracite industry and enactment of the Wilson workmen's compensation laws; the farmers through utter failure to write into the statute books any kind of a milk control law; the unemployed through enactment of the "Pleasant Starve" bill, under which it is contended a person could be forced off the relief rolls if he failed to carry out orders to push a ten-ton roller up a hill; civil service advocates by enactment of the Van Alstyne relief revision bill giving the Governor full authority to dismiss yesterday's appointees, and labor generally through enactment of the Pease labor relations bill and the labor injunction bill.

With these items for a starter, the Democrats in their efforts to stage a comeback during the coming campaign will point to the Administration-backed liquor revision bill as a basis for a charge that only last-minute impulse kept the liquor control system from being plunged into politics. Then, of course, there was the staunchly-supported proposal to give county relief boards full authority to hire and fire relief workers, which will serve as the basis for a few Democratic campaign speeches.

Whatever the outcome of the 1940 senatorial battle, it looks now as if Democrats in the Senate would have to be looking around for a new floor leader for the next regular session.

Senator Harry Shapiro, Philadelphia, who has carried the ball for the minority forces this session since yesterday he would not run for re-election.

Shapiro was elected to the Senate in 1932 as a Republican, but during the second regular session of his term he drifted over to the support of the Earle administration.

In consequence of this, the Republicans refused to sponsor him for another term and he ran as a Democrat, winning easily over the old guard candidate, and has been something of a thorn in the side of the Republican organization ever since.

In paying his respects to his colleagues in the upper chamber, he said: "I don't expect to be back here again. I know I shall not be back unless there is a special session before my term ends (November 30, 1940). I shall not be a candidate again."

Well Known Couple Observe Anniversary

Symmonds and Elmer Mullberger, have passed away.

The newlyweds went to house-keeping in Bellefonte, and about eight years after their marriage purchased the home on South Spring street where they have resided ever since. Mr. Solt entered the draying business about 42 years ago, and today he and his only son, Lee, are in partnership in one of the town's best known draying and hauling firms.

Mr. Solt is a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Peter Solt and was born near State College 76 years ago. He has two brothers, James and Conrad Solt, both of Williamsport. Mrs. Solt was a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Symmonds, of Pleasant Gap, and is now 72 years old. She has two brothers and three sisters: Levi Symmonds, Flinton; George, of the Democrats; Mrs. A. M. Bailey, Bellefonte; Mrs. John Roy, Centre Furnace, and Mrs. Delia Williams, State College.

Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Solt, and of the five, one, Mrs. Hazel Emerick, formerly of Bellefonte, is deceased. The others are: Lee, of Bellefonte; Mrs. John Weber and Mrs. Walter Speary, also of Bellefonte; and Mrs. William Straub, of Harrisburg. There are eight grandchildren.

Mr. and Mrs. Solt are members of the Methodist church and both enjoy excellent health. To them on their anniversary The Centre Democrat extends hearty congratulations and wishes for many more anniversaries of the ceremony which made them man and wife fifty years ago.

Farmer's Experience In Raising Cattle brought a price of $9.25 per hundred weight as of the Lancaster sales, the buyer also paying the trucking charges.

Mr. Hayes made no attempt to keep a record of the cost of attendance upon the cattle or of the feed which the cattle consumed, since they were fed at the same time as they were fed in his herd. Twice a day they were fed ensilage, together with cotton seed and corn chop, as well as hay. The cotton seed alone cost $34.50 a ton. "I have no idea of the quantity I used," Mr. Hayes said.

Through their period of fattening, the cattle were kept in the barn, only being taken out in the yard for water but not being permitted to roam in the fields.

Heavy Windstorm Wreaks Destruction

ing implements and a truck, all of which were badly damaged. Twelve trees in the orchard were uprooted.

Many small buildings on farms all through the area were blown over or badly damaged. Scores of trees were torn out by their roots, and evidences of the great power of the wind were to be seen on all sides.

All along the Branch Road and in and around State College, trees were blown over and limbs broken off. At the Centre Hills Country Club a large tree making the dog-leg on the No. 5 fairway—long a hazard to golfers—fell before the fury of the wind.

Damage to buildings is virtually a complete loss for none of the owners carried insurance against loss by wind. Occasionally in this area wind damages a roof, and one or two uprooted trees are no rarity, but never within recollection have substantial buildings been damaged to so widespread a scale.

FUGITIVE SEIZED AT HOME IN OSCEOLA MILLS

A fugitive from justice and sought by police in this State for six months, Jack Simmons, 32, of Portage, was arrested Saturday night at a residence in Osceola Mills by William Delansky, chief of police of Osceola. Later a detective from the Johnstown police squad took Simmons to Cambria county.

Tipped off sometime ago that Simmons would possibly contact Osceola some time or other, Chief of Police Delansky made his arrest after he had tracked down a rumor he received from Houtzdale.

It is believed that Simmons had been hiding in Osceola for some time and had made the home where he was caught one of his temporary hideouts.
