RECOMPENSE

For sorrows that each heart does bear, Some restitution rises; The little joys found everywhere Become life's golden prizes. There's not a soul with all its grief That finds no hidden pleasure. If it, through trial, still holds belief That strength to bear is treasure. Just as the sparkling dew of morn Displaces nightly gloom, The joy of each year is reborn Within the flowers' bloom. No burden is so great to bear That courage cannot lighten; And in the depths of dark despair Lies strength to lift and brighten. —Lamont Johnson.
