

What's Wrong With Bellefonte

Bellefonte, couldn't you? Didn't you often say—? "Now wait a minute, Myrt. I don't want to hear you speak disrespectfully of the dead. Besides, I don't know that there is anything particularly wrong with Bellefonte."

"But there must be," she says, "for people wouldn't be writing notices for the paper about it. You're just trying to start an argument with me."

"For heaven's sake, let's skip it," she says. "Why should we get excited over something that doesn't exist?" "Joe," she flares back, "you all there and tell me there is nothing wrong when a town has an ailment? Didn't you tell Aunt Marg last spring, when her pet Angora was sick, that nothing ailed it, and the very next day the veterinarian said the cat had worms?"

"Oh, yeah," I see, "then why not call up the veterinarian; maybe he'll say that's what ails Bellefonte?" "Smarty," she says, "that's about all the sense I could expect from a man who hasn't any sympathy for a town that may have one foot in the grave for all you know. If you had the least bit of interest in your own community you'd write in to that Lies Committee, or what ever they call it, in Washington and have them start an investigation!"

"Myrt, I see, you're not so far off in your guess, but it happens to be the Lies Committee you're talking about. However, let me tell you they don't go around feeling the pulse and looking at the tongue of little dumps like Bellefonte."

"Well," she says, defiant-like, "I'll bet I could find out what is wrong with this burg without half trying." "Oh, let's forget it," I see, "and go out and have a sundae."

So we step out and heads for the nearest drug store, neither of us saying much until Myrt gets an inspiration. She spots a flashily-dressed gent standing at the bank corner, and says: "Joe, that man's a stranger in town; I'll bet he would know what's wrong with it."

"I see," now look here, Gert, let's not have any more of that tonight." "She says, 'why any more of what, Joe?'" "I see, 'why any more arguing about Bellefonte?'" "Why, Joe," she says, "I am just going to ask him a few simple questions. I am not going to argue with him."

long period of years.

For some years he was chief of staff of the hospital, retaining that position until several years ago when he retired from the post and was honored with an emeritus title. He maintained offices for general practice in The Centre Democrat building, West High street.

Dr. Sebring was a member of the Centre County Medical Society and of the American Medical Association. He was one of the oldest members of the Bellefonte Elks lodge and in his youth was one of this community's better known cyclists. He and the late Harry C. Yeager of Bellefonte, were well known as outstanding cyclists and bicycle racers.

John Sebring was a son of John P. and Mary Jane (Ferguson) Sebring and was born at Jersey Shore on September 5, 1870, making his age 68 years, 11 months and 6 days. He attended the Philadelphia School of Pharmacy and was employed for a short time in a Philadelphia pharmacy before he came to Bellefonte to accept employment in the late F. Potts Green pharmacy, which for many years was located in the Bush House building.

Largely through Mr. Green's persuasion the young druggist took up the study of "medicine" and was graduated from Jefferson Medical College in 1891. He then managed a year or so later, Dr. Sebring began practice for himself.

He was united in marriage with the former Miss Frederika Woltjen, of Pottsville, who survives with these children: Henrietta, of Philadelphia; Ruth, of Newburgh, N. Y.; and Mrs. Thomas S. Derr, of Waban, Mass. Also surviving are a brother, J. Woods Sebring, of Philadelphia, and four grandchildren, the children of Mr. and Mrs. Derr.

During the World War Dr. Sebring was rejected for overseas service because of physical disability, but he was in the service of the government and was sent to New England under Major General Rupert Blue to aid in combating the infantile paralysis epidemic that swept the country during the last year of the war.

Funeral services were held Monday at the home, with the Rev. William C. Thompson, pastor of the Bellefonte Presbyterian church, officiating. Interment was made in the Union cemetery.

Protest Road From Zion to Pleasant Gap

As a substitute plan, the group favors the extension of the Pleasant Gap-Zion road straight past the Zion cemetery and along an existing dirt road to Hecla Park, where it would join the Nittany Valley Highway.

Sewage Disposal Plant Inspected

erty is surrounded by an embankment which is two feet higher than Spring Creek has ever known to have been at flood stage. Atop the bank is an iron and wire fence with a single opening at the upper end of the tract, along the road leading to the iron bridge across Spring Creek.

According to Mr. Davis' lucid explanation of the workings of the plant, all sewage in entering the pump house will be strained through soluble solids which might find their way into the system. Large electrically driven pumps will then force the sewage into a "de-greasing unit," where air will be forced through the sewage to liberate any grease it may contain. The grease will float to the top of the unit where it will be scooped off manually at intervals. The grease will be buried on the property.

From the de-greasing unit the sewage will pass into one of a series of three giant Imhoff tanks. These tanks, open at the top, are nothing more than gigantic settling vessels. As the raw sewage passes into the tanks, the solids will settle to the bottom and pass through openings to "digestion chambers" beneath, where the solids are "digested" by the natural action of bacteria.

Periodically—perhaps once every six months—the heavy sludge from the digestion chambers will be pumped into a series of four filter beds, where the liquid matter will drain through the sand and crushed stone bottom into the pipes. The solid matter, a dry powdery, odorless substance is unsuited for garden loam or fertilizer. It requires about a month's time for the liquid sludge to dry into the plant where it runs through the usual purifying process before being turned into the creek.

After the solids are removed from the sewage in the Imhoff tanks, the liquid matter passes into a sprinkler bed which consists of a round cement tank, 130 feet in diameter and about seven feet high, which is filled level with 5,000 tons of carefully selected and graded limestone.

In the center of this tank is an axis which is suspended upon a deloate ball bearing a framework consisting of four arms which extend from the center to the outer edge of the tank. Along one side of each of the hollow arms is a series of openings. Sewage drains from the Imhoff tanks to the axis in the center of the sprinkler bed. It passes out along the four arms and through the holes to spray out on the limestone. Like a gigantic garden sprinkler, the sewage spraying through the holes gives the axis an impetus which causes the giant framework to revolve on its axis, spraying the liquid evenly over the entire area of stones.

The sewage trickles through the limestone, in which will develop millions of small red worms. These worms will eat the impurities out of the liquid, so that by the time the water reaches the bottom of the tank and is drawn off into large concrete vats to be pumped back into the creek, from 90 to 95 percent of the impurities having been removed. In fact, the water coming from the final treatment stage at the plant is purer than the water used for drinking purposes in many cities, it is reported.

One engineer is reported to have a practice of drinking a glass of water as it comes from the sprinkler bed to prove to him the doubting that the sewage is really purified. This is not a recommended practice, however.

The operation of the plant is nearly automatic, but it requires a certain amount of attention. The motors and machinery must be oiled regularly, and inspections must be made to be sure everything is in proper operating condition. An automatic device in the pump house will keep an accurate record of the amount of sewage flowing through the plant at all times.

Two Killed, Score Injured As Picnic Truck Upsets

Only one of the 26, Victor Unick, 10, who was treated for shock by Dr. G. A. Ricketts at Osceola, escaped without actual injury. The youth landed unhurt from the truck hurtling when he fell on top of a "fat woman" who had been hurled from the truck.

The driver of the truck, Tofield Gravish, 24, son of the president of the Lithuanian club at Osceola, escaped with slight injuries. He was released Sunday from the hospital and posted $1000 bond for his appearance at the coroner's jury which will be impaneled by Dr. W. R. Heaton, of Phillipsburg as soon as those involved in the accident are physically fit to attend.

Still in the hospital Monday were John Popovich, 15, Martin Olosky, 24, Mike Dipko, 24, Steve Yokobosky, 24, Frank Katuzis, 22, Vicky Moskovich, 16, and Mrs. Frances Rosnoy, about 50, and Vincent Bogus. All of these injured with the exception of Katuzis, suffering from a back injury, are suffering from severe scalp injuries. Released from the hospital Sunday were Mrs. Victoria Sokol, mother of one of the accident fatalities, Gravish, the driver, and Paul Jones, 75.

William Vaughn of Sandy Ridge said that when the truck overturned the air was filled with human bodies. He stated he heard shrieks when the truck overturned and then saw the bodies chud to the road. Vaughn said, "a woman ran up the embankment after the accident and sobbed 'my daughter Helen is dead.'" The anguished parent is believed to have been Mrs. Sokol.

Paul Womer, Sandy Ridge, said: "I thought all those on the road were dead." He said he saw one youth raise himself on one elbow in a piteous effort to rise and then sank back unconscious on the macadam road.

Immediately after the accident hurried calls were put through for ambulances. Motorists were stopped along the road and the victims hurried to medical aid. The Sandy Ridge fire truck was put into service and roared into Phillipsburg with a full load of bodies. The hospital ambulance aided in taking the bodies away.

The Phillipsburg State Hospital was taxed to capacity with the sudden rush of the injured. Relatives of the victims stood in grief-stricken groups around the entrance seeking any trace or any report on the injured.

Also injured but released from the hospital Saturday night were Mary Shinarick, 16, Irene Sokol, 8, Margaret Sokol, 9, Paul Rosnoy, 35, Alphonse Boliski, 15, and Vincent Graboski. Treated by Dr. G. A. Ricketts at Osceola were Clarence Wilson, 12, Walter Beres, 12, Victor Unick, 10, John Matia, 20, Roy Sokol, 17, and Mrs. John Adams, about 50, and her daughter, aged 10.

Funeral services were held yesterday morning from the St. Joseph's Catholic church at Osceola Mills for Miss Helen Sokol, 15, Osceola, who died of injuries received in Saturday's accident. Miss Sokol died late Saturday night of a possible fracture of the skull at the Phillipsburg hospital where she was taken following the wreck.

Offer Chance To Buy Farms

"Take this year, for example," Mr. Havens continued, "Here we have been suffering from a severe drought. Now, if a farmer were buying his farm under the fixed payment plan, it would mean that he might have to use up all his earned, and more to meet his annual payment. He might even have to go in debt for some of his groceries. Or he might have to take his son or daughter out of college."

"Two or three successive years of such circumstances, in the past, have in many cases resulted in foreclosure, and the loss of farm and home," he said.

Any farm tenant, sharecropper or farm laborer in Centre county, who is interested in such loans—to purchase farms of their own—may now borrow under the variable payment plan, by making application to: Oakley S. Havens, County Supervisor, Farm Security Administration, 234 East College Avenue, State College.

Only a limited number of loans can be made this year in Centre county, Mr. Havens explained. Applicants will be selected by a county committee on the basis of character, industry and experience. Preference is given to applicants who have nearly sufficient livestock and equipment to operate farms of their own.

Applications received in this office prior to August 28 will receive preference in the selection of farmers who will borrow from this year's Tenant Purchase appropriation. Applications received after August 28 may have to wait for later appropriations.

Paint Fumes Prove Fatal

offset the effects of the turpentine and paint fumes.

Coroner W. R. Heaton, of Phillipsburg, was called, and he was expected to conduct an investigation into the death late yesterday. Murphy company officials said that Weber had gone into the room by himself at about 10 o'clock after he had finished work in another room. He had apparently been painting over the door of the room, believed to have been closed, when he was overcome. There is no ventilation in the room, which is reserved for photographic purposes.

It was said that Weber was in the room no more than 25 minutes. The young man's father, Thomas Weber, Sr., said that his son had been in good health.
