AGRICULTURE INSEPARABLE PART OF NATIONAL ECONOMY
Sounding the keynote, "What's Ahead for Rural America?" in his presidential address, Dean Chris L. Christensen of the University of Wisconsin college of agriculture opened the national forum of the American Country Life Association at the Pennsylvania State College recently.

Dean Christensen emphasized that farmers and their families are greatly confused about the effects of changing social, economic and political forces and modern technologies which influence their farm incomes and threaten the future of their family life. The real problem, the dean said, is how the farmer and his family can attain freedom through organization and group action.

"Agriculture is an inseparable part of our national economy," the association president pointed out, "and will not be a sound economic condition until national economy is set in order. The change to commercial farming has increased problems of agricultural marketing, and has thrown the farmer into the vortex of a complicated urban economic situation."

The welfare of American agriculture is not only wrapped up in the same package with American industry, commerce and labor, but it is tied in no uncertain way to world economic conditions, Dean Christensen stressed. Fully half of our tillable acres produce crops that are dependent upon expert outlets.

Artie Shaw to Play at Hecla Park, Sept. 20

Loma Orchestra and Ray Noble. These were but a few of the galaxy of modern maestros, who with the assistance of their respective orchestras, gave the very appreciative audience their individual conceptions of this thing called "swing."

The program was more than half completed when the master of ceremonies presented a name which was not so well known, Artie Shaw and his Orchestra. It was indeed a surprise. Although Shaw amongst his fellow musicians and the initiates of modern music possessed an enviable reputation as a clarinetist, no one expected him to make a bid for a director's laurels.

Shaw's Orchestra proved to be a legitimate string quartet, it was almost sacrilege. A string quartet participating in a "swing" festival. It was an anomaly that just "couldn't be done." Unaware that he was causing such an undercurrent of consternation, young Shaw proceeded with his own delineation of "swing." With the four strings and instruments as a soft and melodious background, he wove throbbings and pulsating patterns of tone with his clarinet. He presented one of his own compositions written especially for this instrumentation, which embodied and accentuated everything the excited audience had ever dreamed about "swing."

They could hardly believe it yet their ears told them it was a fact. Artie Shaw, the new messiah of the latest trends in dance music, left the stage to the accompaniment of thunderous applause. To put it mildly, he was easily the outstanding hit of the concert.

Rockwell-O'Keefe General Amusement Corporation, managers of such stellar names as Jimmy Dorsey, Larry Clinton, heard about Shaw's "swing" triumph and his novel ideas concerning orchestral instrumentation. They suggested that he incorporate these innovations into a permanent unit and continue his role as director.

The initial engagement of the new organization was at the Lexington Hotel in New York City. Artie, to avoid monotony, had augmented his group to include brass and a rhythm section but the nucleus remained the same string quartette which had created such a furore at the "swing" concert in the Imperial Theatre. The rest is now history. Artie Shaw and his band will appear at Hecla Park next Wednesday night, September 20.
