Last Friday some one spoke of the manner of conserving our Christmas trees that of planting the tree in a box. The tree can be used for several times as a Christmas tree before planting it in the timberland. A very good plan it is. So many (thirty little white pine, hemlock or cedar trees are often spoiled by cutting only the tops. We need to conserve our forests or else lose the water supply we so greatly need. Folks of this community remember the time when the water flow of Pine Creek and other streams of this locality were two to three times as much as now, simply because the timber was not cut out so much. We're told that the Kleckner, The Rabbit Shanty and the Cinder Pile spring are bone dry, as well as a number of others used to flow copiously, nearly the entire year.
