The Finns are the guys who put the "finish" to the Russian invasion.

If you listen carefully you can hear the politicians putting their ears to the ground.

Poverty has its advantages. We often wonder how much sin there would be in the world if everybody could afford it.

If, as an optometrist estimates, 72 per cent of the American people are suffering from eye-strain, It probably is due to looking for a place to park.

And if the money spent for war could be spent to make people prosperous and happy, there would be cars enough to eliminate the surplus population without shooting them.

Mediation Board, which in itself is highly commendable to that great organization.

One of the most imortant factors in anyone's life is the health of the individual, whether good or bad. It ought to be unnecessary to call the attention of grown people to the importance of having themselves periodically examined by competent physicians. To do so is to avoid the dangers of organic troubles that slip up on so many citizens and cause death. Many fatal diseases can be cured in their early stages, but if neglected, mean sure and

After the President's budget message went to Congress. Whitehouse sources explained that the Administration expected increasingly better business conditions to alleviate the need for government relief to farmers and the unemployed. Consequently, it is said to be "misleading" to say that 600,000 WPA workers will be fired or that the farm funds will be cut twenty-five per cent. If the contemplated business upswing does not occur, there is the possibility of asking Congress for a larger appropriation.

This fact stands out boldly: In nothing that the Roosevelt administration has done is there any evidence that it was trying to enrich any particular small group of financiers, pirates and bucaneers at the expense of the rest of the country. If mistakes were made they were made in the sincere desire to help the people who work for their living. The mood of reform which ushered in Mr. Roosevelt's first administraton may have exhausted itself. Nevertheless, the next administration given the responsibility of power in Washington, be it Republican or Democratic, liberal or conservative, will be compelled to deal with the paradox of hunger in the midst of potentially plenty, of joblessness when the honest labor of every citizen should be utilized in producing the goods and services needed to make all America well fed, well housed, well clothed.

CALIFORNIA SELLS GROCERIES

The State of California has opened its initial unit in a production-for-use program and the reader probably wonders just what this means. Well, in the first place, it is a store, in which goods, produced by State-sponsored producers' cooperatives, are offered for sale to families on relief. In addition, the store sells to members of the cooperatives that produce the goods that it sells. Significantly, any profit made by the store is divided among the buyers. Items not available from producers' co-operatives are purchased wholesale by

The smart business man will witness this cloud on the horizon. While present customers of the State-owned store are limited to the two classes mentioned, does anyone suspect that if the scheme sells goods cheaper than regular business establishments that future customers will be so limited? If anyone does, then he has no familiarity with the predilection of office-holders to extend favors to their constituents.

Half of the items, so the news dispatches tell us, are produced by the co-operatives and this includes meat, poultry, dairy products, honey, jams, preserves, baked goods, fresh and canned fruits, vegetables, cereals, salad oil, pickles, catsup, soap and soap products, household chemical and fly sprays. As the scheme develops it is safe to assume that newly formed state co-operative producing groups will be organized and, in time, the entire stock of goods will be so produced.

We do not pass upon the wisdom of such a State venture. We merely report it. Business men will pass their own judgment upon the scheme.

"A Little Nonsense Now and Then, Is Relished by the Wisest Men"

The Ex He-Man (By the Smokehouse Poet)

I've always been bragging that I'm a "he-man," And been very cocky as such, Though not really sure that I fitted the term,

And not understanding it much. I knew I was hard-boiled, and sturdy, and tough And not the effeminate kind, But just what a he-man's qualities were

Had never once entered my mind. One night I went out with a cute little girl Who weighed just a hundred and nine, And thinking to make an immediate hit,

I gave her the old "he-man" line. "Just what do you mean by a he-man?" she asked, What wonderful things can you do That set you apart in a class by yourself?

I see nothing queer about you." Her inquiry stumped me; I had to think fast, But I felt certain she couldn't guess Any better than I could, the virtues that go

To make up a he-man's prowess. So I started to tell her the things I could do. And Paul Bunyan's feats would sound tame After hearing my exploits-the way that I lied Put Baron Munchausen to shame.

I told her I could whip four men at once, And chew up great ingots of steel, And pull up an eight-foot oak by the roots, And shoulder an automobile.

I said I could catch tigers in my bare hands, And run down a wild mountain goat, And cross the Pacific with nothing but oars, In the biggest dang warship affoat.

Then I started describing the things I could do In society's gentler realm. And as I proceeded my brain limbered up-

Ananias was right at the helm. I vowed I could drink seven gallons of wine. And thirty-six bottles of beer, And top it all off with a quart of old rye And not even start to feel queer,

I swore I could dance for six weeks at a stretch And never once take off my shoes; Then, the orchestra dead, pick the piano up And dance on while playing the blues. I said I could neck eighteen girls in a swoon,

And still be alert and awake, And looking for more, just as fresh as a rose-But there's where I made my mistake!

"There are no mountain goats and no tigers around," She said, "and no ingots of steel; But that last he-man stunt," and she smiled a coy smile "Has made a resistless appeal!"

Well, my sad tale is told; I tried hard to make good, And never, oh, never again Will anyone hear me slapping my chest And bragging that I'm a "he-man!"

The fisherman smiled in a superior manner. "That's not luck, brother," he boasted. "It's just that I'm smart should be accorded more praise and enough to use the proper bait."

"That's interesting," observed the stranger, "And might I ask what a wedding, but did not attend, is kind of bait you use?" by sticking to such a young man, The fisherman chuckled. "Sure thing, pardner," he returned. "I use a hat my wife bought last year."
