Congress might reduce the budget but not in an election year.

The way to help Finland is to see that she gets munitions to end the war that Russia started.

It looks to us as though men will never get back to work until money goes back to work.

Louis Johnson, assistant secretary of war, gives us something to think about when he says that the nation should have on hand actual munitions reserves and equipment for an army of 1,000,000 men.

The admission of 82,998 immigrants into the United States in the last fiscal year, which ended on June 30th, represents the highest number since 1931. This figure compares with more than a million immigrants in some years before the quota system was applied to stop the flood of newcomers to the

The Game Commission announces that the lowly skunk is no longer protected as a fur-bearing animal and during the period up to September 30 of next year, it is lawful to kill skunks in any manner except through the use of poison. As we write this paragraph, a kibitzer looking over our shoulder observingly asks if it includes the two-legged variety.

The most difficult battle of all politically is that waged against a deeply implanted prejudice which in self-interest. That is the seat of the opposition to Secretary of State Cordell Hull's reciprocal trading agreements . . . For years it has been the practice to preach 'buy American' . Like all good things it is open to abuse easily. It has been frightfully abused since the close of the World War to the great financial loss of both the American farmer and American industry. For agriculture, particularly dependent upon uncertain elements, must enjoy a foreign market to be prosperous. The American people cannot expect to sell reasonably if they refuse to buy.

Former U. S. Senator David A. Reed and Judge Kephart, who have been keeping Republican leaders on pins and needles for the past month or two. have announced they won't be candidates for the Senate. Now the Republican State Committee can relax and concentrate on Jay Cooke, Philadelphia Republican chairman, as the "official" Republican candidate. It was only a week or more ago, when the Republican heads were worrying about Reed announcing his candidacy, that Reed told newsmen he didn't know whether he would run or not but he would have plenty to tell someone later." Political observers are left wondering if the statement that he would not run was the "plenty" Reed had to tell.

President Roosevelt's attitude toward a third term continues to intrigue the politicians and newspaper writers in Washington. Last week, for example, one could find almost any opinion on the subject. The United States News came forth with the positive statement that the President would not "choose to run." His attitude, it was explained, expressed a personal preference but would not close the door to an overwhelming draft of his services if circumstances seemed to warrant such action. By contrast, Arthur Krock, head of the New York Times Bureau, stated that the majority of those in Washington "believe Mr. Roosevelt is definitely maneuvering for renomination, whatever the turn of events," Obviously, the reader can take his choice.

Little surprise is occasioned by the British Government's action in rejecting the theory under which twenty-one American republics undertook to establish a neutrality belt extending an average of three hundred miles from the coasts of North and South America. The British decline to surrender the right, as a belligerent, to attack and seize enemy warships and merchantmen outside the three-mile limit and, in effect, ask for assurances that the sea area, thus set aside, is to be in fact neutral and that the republics of this hemisphere are prepared to enforce the dictum they have laid down. In this connection, the nations on this side of the Atlantic are faced with considering the steps to be taken to enforce the declaration as to the safety zone. At present they hardly possess the naval strength to make their proclamation effective and, even if they did, it is doubtful whether the idea would be pushed to the extremity of bringing about a conflict with Newspapers and banks have at least one thing in common. Both of them get plenty of criticism. The most difficult thing that we can think of at the moment is to run a bank or a newspaper to please everyone. If the banker is conservative he is charged with not being helpful to the community. If he lends the depositors' money too freely he is riticised when the borrower can't repay and the bank closes. Likewise, the newspaper man who prints all the news regardless of who makes it, is criticized and called sensational. If he leaves it out he is charged with being afraid to print the news. The best plan for the banker and the newspaper man is to run his business the way he thinks it hould be run and let the critics criticize. It would an interesting experiment if "self-starting" critics were given charge of the nation's banks and newspapers for a period. It is a safe bet that they'd rapidly learn a sad lesson—and an equally safe bet that the public which depends on banks to safeguard its money and newspapers to give it the news of the world, would take a terrific beating.

The number of American participants in the World War, claiming Federal benefits of one kind or another, has increased under all heads, according to the annual report of the Veteran's Admin-istration for the year 1938. Interesting is the fact that at the end of 1939, there was one person receiving a pension on account of services rendered by a soldier in the war of 1812, which ended one hundred and twenty-four years ago. There are 168 widows and two helpless children of deceased veterans of the Mexican War. World War Veterans and their dependents received $241,841,228 in 1939, exclusive of sums spent on the hospitalization of 165.576 veterans admitted to such institutions during the year.

In the passing of Senator William E. Borah the nation has lost a greater pillar than the Republican party to which he gave majority allegiance. Senator Borah was elected as a Republican and continued to bear that party's label. Yet it was impossible to make any party brand or political classi-fication stick to him. At times he was loyally with clung steadfastly to the principle of state's rights. his party. At others he opposed it, but always he He was politically fearless, a liberal and progressive in thought. For forty years he has been influential in guiding the destinies of the nation. In the causes he espoused he was not always right but future history will give him credit for striving to the utmost to advance the best interests, as he saw them, of the nation over a long span of momentous years,

On Friday of this week, the commercial treaty between the United States and Japan lapses after existing for twenty-nine years, and the commercial relationship between the two nations will be on a basis of international law. There will be no legal barrier to discriminatory acts against Japan if that country practices discriminations against the trade of this country. Meanwhile, Japanese officials are seeking some method to bring the period between the lapse of the existing treaty and negotiations of a new trade pact. In view of the situation in the Far East, however, it is doubtful whether the American government will make any commitments toward Japan unless there are effective guarantees of equal and fair treatment in the Japanese-dominated areas of China. These guarantees, it may be said, are not expected to be forthcoming.

Just about the time that the nation begins to worry about the budgetary problems of the Federal Government, word comes from Washington that Congress is considering the appointment of a special committee to study the subject independently of the executive department. This is interesting. We have never pinned much hope in economy, a la Congress, but you never can tell. Maybe the boys will cut the money going to farmers, to those on relief, the veterans and other well organized groups that look to the Treasury for funds. This may happen but we will have to see it first and we do not expect to see it in an election year. Balancing the budget is extremely simple. Just forget about the unemployed, the plight of the farmers, the need for adequate defense and other functions that the public demand. The budget will automatically be balanced. It will stay balanced until another election day rolls around and then a new set of legislators will unbalance the budget.

If you listened to Governor James last night, says the Pittsburgh Press, you were left with the impression that his administration, in its first year in office, was the best in the state's history and that of his predecessor was the worst. It is probably asking too much to expect politicians to keep their feet on the ground when expounding their virtues and the other fellow's faults. But Governor James would have left a much better taste in his listeners' mouths if he had not tried to blame everything wrong in Pennsylvania upon the Earle administration and credit everything worthwhile to his own regime. The truth of the matter is that the Earle administration, with all of its mistakes, with all of the aroma of scandal surrounding some of its chief figures, was responsible for many longoverdue and worthwhile reforms in government, It was responsible for the passage of social legislation of all kinds; it overhauled various state institutions; it launched a large-scale program of state construction that had been needed for years. To belittle its accomplishments as Governor James did to picture it as a wholly bad administration without any redeeming virtues, is neither accurate nor good politics. The voters know better than to swallow

ARE WE NEAR TO WAR? (Altoona Tribune)

It is not pleasant to read such predictions as that made this week by Will C. Durant, aged philosopher and author, from the lecture platform in

Dr. Durant said he believed the United States would be at war in 14 months, "When English cities are bombed," said Dr. Durant, "you'll be hanged at the nearest lamp post if you are for peace. We will be at war in 14 months and our going will be because of propaganda and our moral susceptibility." We may disparage such predictions and question the judgment of the person who so takes it upon himself to forecast the future, but, we may say we see Dr. Durant's point, or think we do. The Franco-British war against Germany and the Nazi conquest of Poland stirred us greatly. But it was not until red Russia invaded Poland that we really began to become emotionally concerned with the course of foreign war-makers. In the brief time that Pinland has been so valiantly defending herself, we have seen most of our good intentions for staying clear of entangling European alliances thrown out the window. Even from the administration, which went to such pains to warn us against unneutral actions, we have observed a strong tendency to skip neutrality when it comes to Finland and Russia, The government, and congress, are seriously considering making a war loan to Finland; money with which to buy munitions of war to wage the battle against Russia. This, in spite of two vital angles: First, that such action would be in direct opposition to our stated natonal policy of neutrality; for when we get into the munitions angle, then we no longer can claim to be neutral. And secondly, in making such a loan as has been proposed, it is assumed Finland will be victorious. If she loses, of course, we lose our investment We cannot be the international policeman who goes to the aid of every democracy attacked by dictators. We may give food and clothing and medical help. But when it comes to providing funds for a nation to wage war, then we must adhere to our policy of neutrality.

We must adhere to it or be prepared for war as the consequence of our folly. It seems beyond belief that Finland can last long enough to wear down Russia's vast resources in men and materials. The divisions Russia reportedly has lost in Finland are as nothing compared to her enormous man-power. We look with apprehension upon such ill-advised plans as that proposed by Congressman John

Dingell of Michigan, who would sell the United States' army's new Garand automatic rifles to Finns at $1 each! And they cost us $100 a piece! Even our own army is not nearly sufficiently equipped with these weapons. If we were to follow

Dingell's suggestion, we would let them out, give away their secrets, before we have had the opportunity to prepare ourselves with them. We must look to ourselves, while giving such humane help as we can to Europe. Admiral Harold Stark told the house naval appropriations committee this week there was a "distinct possibility" of attack upon the western hemisphere by a coalition of foreign nations. There are signs enough, it may be, to warrant Dr. Durant's dire prediction. We must remind ourselves again that we tried to be noble in 1917 and fought a valiant fight with very doubtful results judging from the present holocaust.
