> Many Centre county beekeepers are making arrangements now to order packaged bees from the South. reports County Agent R. C. Blaney. The extended cold period killed many bees even where food was available nearby. Package bees will be used to replace or strengthen these weakened or completely destroyed colonies.

When temperatures remain low, bees are unable to move from one part of the hive to another. This may result in starvation. Rather heavy losses are expected this year. However, he offers the encouraging information that usually after a severe winter, honey production is ex-

Because of the probable demand for package bees this year, place orders early. Later, it may be difficult to obtain desired supplies. Order as soon as you know your requirements. A tentative order can be made early and changed a week or two before shipment.

Two or three pound packages are satisfactory for each colony, provided the bees are given proper care. Each pound represents approximately 4000 bees. Packages for developing new colonies are accompanied with a queen, but if the bees are to be used to strengthen weak colonies, they may or may not be ordered with a queen.

The general practice is to have package bees arrive in southern Pennsylvania about the middle of April and about the last of the month in the northern areas of the
