

THE WAR IN EUROPE

Russian Masses Begin to Tell

Mass forces of Soviet Russia are beginning to tell heavily in the fighting with Finland, where the forces of the tiny republic, outnumbered if not outfought, have been losing some ground recently.

When the fighting began, a number of weeks ago, military experts predicted that the only chance for Finland depended upon the immediate dispatch of assistance from outside powers. For weeks the Finns put up a brave battle, surprising the world with their successes. How much aid has reached the republic is conjectural but we doubt if it has been substantial, regardless of the aid in various nations.

As the Russians began to score successes on the Karelian peninsula there were intimations that planes, guns and men were being rushed to Finland. The question is whether the assistance comes too late, whether the Finns can hold off the slow-moving, ponderous advance of the Red masses. The answer will become plain before long.

Unusual Warfare Continue

News from the other battlefront is but a repetition of what we have reported for many weeks. On the high seas the British and the Germans battle it out for control of the ocean or that Germany has made serious progress toward "reversing" the blockade.

On the Western front, where two huge armies face fortified positions, which seem too strong for successful assault, the strange inactivity continues. The lack of attack is not unreasonable but it is peculiar in a war involving so many soldiers. Few have ever been fought like the campaign on the eastern border of France.

In the air no great activity is visible. German planes continue to attack, and sometimes to sink, British ships along the British coast, but the comparatively few planes used in these forays evidence the minimum results secured to date. This aerial offensive designed to offset the British surface fleet's power, will look like something formidable only when large numbers are used with more striking results.

The Balkans and Near East

The situation in the Balkans seem to have eased a bit during the past weeks, with signs that Bulgaria is about ready to "play ball" with other nations in an effort to prevent the spread of the war into the southeast.

The economic importance of these nations to Germany, however, may become increasingly important if the Allied blockade produces dire shortages in Germany. If this becomes dangerous, there is always the chance that Germany will move into the Balkan area, if not through choice, then through the hope of securing supplies that are vital.

Offsetting this threat, and likewise backing up Allied policy and guarantees, is the large army that Great Britain and France have assembled in the Near East. Recent arrival of Australian soldiers at-

Some borrowed shovels to dig away the piled-up snow. Among the cars and trucks which were held up in the snow was a big vehicle loaded with bottled soft drinks. The refreshing beverage froze in the course of the night, pushing the caps off nearly all the bottles.

The bus, which had been making uninterrupted progress on its route, until it was stopped by the stalled passenger cars and trucks which were unable to advance in the deep snow, was also hemmed in from the rear by traffic which followed in its wake.

Snowed in at Lodge

The snow in the mountains in the water shed of the Beech Creek and to the east towards the Susquehanna river is reported to have risen two feet deep. Men walking from the coal mines Wednesday afternoon waded through drifted snow up to their waists.

Blaine Kent and William McKean went out to a hunting lodge located in a hollow off Marsh Creek five miles west of Orviston, Tuesday evening and became snowed in.

Thursday afternoon the Kunes car was pulled out a distance of three miles onto the road leading to Marsh Creek, part way by a team of horses, the remainder of the way by Farmer Weaver's tractor. It was quite an experience for Kunes and McKean. Byron Hazlett and Mr. Holter were at the same lodge in the former's car and they had to go through the same process to get out.

With the township supervisors in charge of the country roads where the state highway department formerly had jurisdiction, the opening of these roads after a heavy snow fall becomes a problem without proper equipment. Most residents along such roads now have automobiles, and in many instances buses pick up children for schools.

In Liberty Township there are two school buses, which could not reach some routes last week.

BIRDS MUST DRINK TO PRODUCE EGGS

The importance of normal water consumption by laying hens cannot be overemphasized, claims County Agent R. C. Blaney. Water is an aid to digestion, controls body temperature, lubricates joints and muscles, and is an important part of the structure of the hen's body and her product, the egg. Cold weather slumps in production can be caused by decreased water consumption just as it can be insufficient intake of feed. Ordinarily, birds drink little water on cold days, but they will drink more if the water is slightly warmed. Egg production will be improved. Experimental work shows a direct relationship between per cent of egg production and amount of water consumed. Various devices are available for use in warming water for the laying flocks. If these are not used, poultry men will find it profitable to replenish the water supply frequently, placing warmed water in the drinking pans. There is little advantage in getting birds up early in the morning with artificial lights if a good supply of clean, fresh, warm water is not available.

Lincoln's Perilous Journey

pressed as his judgment that Mr. Lincoln's plans of travel must be changed and that it must be done without publicity.

The absence of Mr. Lincoln had hardly been noticed until all but himself had spoken; and then, as if suddenly called to the recollection of the presence of the man who the decreed victim of the assassin, turned to him for counsel.

Even when personally appealed to seemed reluctant to answer, but when pressed for his opinion he said with scarcely a tremor in his clear voice: "What would the people think of their ruler stealing into his capital like a thief in the night?" He seemed to think little of the peril to his life, but he thought much of the peril of forfeiting the respect of the nation.

Mr. Lincoln's unwillingness to assent to a change of route and program brought the dinner guest to face a new duty, instead of suggesting one by one, they followed Governor Curtin in commanding the President-elect that they must do as they suggest for his own safety. He silently assented, but his was the only face at the table that was not blanched with fear.

New plans were at once laid for changing the time for the President's journey to Washington. The first duty was to avoid even the suspicion outside that the route or time of the President had been changed. To mislead the vast crowd that surrounded the hotel, a carriage was quietly called for Governor Curtin and President Lincoln, and they walked out together, entered the carriage and ordered the driver to take them to the Executive Mansion.

This was a natural proceeding and attracted no attention; but the Executive Mansion was not the destination of the two distinguished executives.

Before they had started orders had been issued to the Pennsylvania Railroad to clear one of the tracks from Philadelphia to Harrisburg, and a special engine and car made ready. To complete the secrecy of the plan, every telegraph line entering Harrisburg was cut.

By the time that was accomplished a carriage stopped near the depot where there were no brilliant rays of gasoline light, and the Governor and President-elect, who had driven circuitously to the depot, alighted. Mr. Lincoln and Colonel Lamon entered the special car and they were soon whirling along on their way to the City of Brotherly Love.

Detective Pinkerton had been left at Philadelphia to arrange matters there in case an emergency should arise. He received Mr. Lincoln and Colonel Lamon at the depot with a private carriage and drove about the city until it was time for the train to start for Washington.

The party then took the rear car, the last that left the city, divided off by a curtain, which was engaged by Pinkerton's lady for a sick brother, and Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Lamon, Mr. Pinkerton and the lady occupied that part of the sleeper for the journey.

They left Philadelphia about 11 o'clock. Not a soul except the four people in the rear end of the car and the few at the dinner party in Harrisburg, knew that Mr. Lincoln had left that city or was on his way to Washington.

Having taken possession of the rear end of the car, the conductor was handed a package of papers, for which he had been instructed by telegram to wait. It is not true, as had often been reported, that Lincoln wore a Scotch cap or used any other mode of disguise. All the persons accompanying him were dressed in ordinary dress and went simply as private citizens.

They arrived at Baltimore at 3 o'clock and waited there, because of some ordinary detention, about two hours. Before the train left workmen began to come around, and one was heard to say, "Old Lincoln's coming here today, but I don't believe he'll get through alive."

Mr. Lincoln laughed heartily at the remark, and soon the train pulled out, and a little after daylight reached Washington.

It is fortunate for the nation that the solution of the situation, so fraught with the gravest consequences, fell upon such able men as sat about the dinner table in Harrisburg that memorable night. And one of them, we are proud to say, was our illustrious fellow-townman, Andrew G. Curtin.

RETURNING FROM SOCIAL FINDS HUSBAND SHOT

Sheeley Morse, 36, was found dead on a couch at his home at Oriole, Lycoming county, about 10:30 o'clock Monday night, by his wife who returned at that time from a social she had been attending. He had been to his former home at Clearfield, and she did not know of his return until she discovered the body. The wound in the chest, believed to have been self-inflicted, was made by a rifle shot.

The family had formerly lived in Clearfield, and Mr. Morse, who was unemployed, had gone to his former home to seek work and make arrangements for moving back to that place. Survivors include his wife, two children and his parents.

We imagine there would be a concerted lament if the birds should pick up and leave.

After Rhett Butler with a horse and buggy saves Scarlett O'Hara and friends from flaming Atlanta, in the film "Gone With the Wind," he hits the horse at the top of a hill overlooking the blazing city and savagely yells the brakes of the wagon. After a stormy scene, Rhett stomps off to join the army. Scarlett picks up the reins and drives on without releasing the brakes. Wonder if that's why the horse dropped dead upon reaching its destination?

"THIS IS THE LIFE!" Sheriff Edward R. Miller took his young son, who likes chewing gum and big trucks, to Harrisburg one day last week. Enroute the Sheriff gave the boy a stick of gum and at frequent intervals they passed large trucks along the road. Finally the youngster beamed: "Boy, Daddy, this is the life! Chewing gum and all these big trucks!"

Forget that you ever heard the term "super-super colossal," in connection with a motion picture, and apply it to "Gone With the Wind," and you have a faint idea of what it is like. In addition to a gripping, fast-moving story and as near perfect a cast it could be possible to obtain, the film is done entirely in natural colors. The photography alone is a thing to marvel at. The art of silhouette photography is used most effectively during the four-hour production. And there is the secret of the film (whatever the secret of the thing) that can hold the unflinching interest of audiences for four hours has something.

Timely Reminders from the Pennsylvania State College School of Agriculture

Keep Birds Drinking—Because water is an aid to digestion, controls body temperature, lubricates joints and muscles, and is an important part of a hen's body, it is essential that the laying flock have a good supply of fresh, clean water available at all times, remind poultry extension specialists at the Pennsylvania State College.

Feeding Baby Bees—A good starting ration for baby bees can be made by mixing equal parts by weight of cracked corn, oats and bran, plus a pound of linseed oil meal or cottonseed meal per day according to livestock extension specialists at Penn State. Also feed legume hay.

Lengthening Life of Buildings—Years of usefulness of farm buildings can be increased by providing spouting and yard drains to handle roof water, making mechanical repairs as needed, and keeping the buildings painted. Penn State agricultural engineers claim.

Spray for Red Mites—Prevalence of numerous egg masses indicate the possibility of serious infections of European red mite on apple trees and call for careful application of oil sprays during the dormant season, report Penn State extension entomologists.

Raise Better Potatoes—Because the consuming public demands better potatoes, extension plant pathologists at Penn State call attention to the importance of using certified seed stock to reduce disease damage to the crop.

Thin Birds Don't Lay—The careful poultryman checks the weights of his birds periodically, according to Penn State poultry extension specialists. A sharp breast bone is a pretty certain forecast of a slump in production of a moll.
