THE SPIDER AND THE FLY.
A great big ugly spider built himself a house one day Then sat him down to wait For unsuspecting prey.

A pretty little fly Came tripping down the street, The spider laughed with glee, When he saw she looked so neat.

Will you walk into my parlor Said the spider to the fly, She looked at him so coyly And with his wishes did comply.

He said within my parlor There is the softest seat, And I have placed a hassock To rest your little feet.

I have baked for luncheon A cake that is so nice, And we shall have some lemonade Just as cold as ice.

Now the spider is a man Unscrupulous, indiscreet, And the fly a pretty maiden Whom he by chance doth meet.

—L. S.
