

HOUSECLEANING TIME MADE EASIER WITH PLENTY OF HOT WATER

By LOUISE BROWN

The most comforting modern trend I know of is the one to make everything possible in the home washable. The way things are going now, the main equipment needed at housecleaning time is plenty of good mild soap and water. It's one thing you want a hot water system that can be depended on to produce hot water every time you turn on a faucet. And that's plenty of times during the spring renovating season. Indeed, I can't think of anything that lessens the drudgery of housecleaning as much as an instant supply of hot water, always ready to whisk up fluffy soapsuds. Hot water and soap are good disinfectants, too, you know, so they help put the house in a clean, sanitary condition.

Just consider how many things can be washed in the home. Wall-papers, fabrics, ceramic and composition tile, glass, linoleum, paint—all can take the soap and water treatment. Of course, the wall paper and special fabrics need rather careful handling, but they can be washed successfully with soapsuds, using a clean sponge and working from ceiling to floor, doing a small section at a time. The other materials can all "take it," with a good thorough washing.

Woodwork, that has a good paint finish, only needs lukewarm water and soapsuds to get it like new—although especially dirty, finger-printed spots may need a mild abrasive powder.

Washable Fabrics

Most fabrics used in draperies and curtains can take the wash tub treatment. Indeed, many of those that look like they wash like a hankie, such as rayon, slip covers and cushions, come down and go to the wash tub with the summer ones. They are washed and ironed to take their place. The summer ones, however, have been washed last fall before they were put away, but sometimes we do forget. Anyway, it is a comfort to know they will wash.

Rugs and upholstered furniture need, first of all, a thorough going over with the electric cleaner. Special attachments for both the floor and hand models get into all the cracks and corners and most of the new cleaners can also go into reverse to remove moth-proofing compounds into the clean upholstery.

Rugs and Upholstery

You may find it necessary to wash rugs and upholstered furniture, and while it's not a job to be undertaken lightly, it can be done. In most cases they can be washed with heavy suds of a mild soap. Sponge with even strokes, doing a small area at a time, scrape the suds off with a spatula, rinse well with a cloth wrung from hot water, and then wipe dry. Always work with the nap or weave of the fabric, using gentle strokes and having the soapsuds as dry as possible. Most spots and stains will come out during this process, but some stubborn ones will need a special cleaning fluid.

If the rug or chair does not need a complete washing, there may be one or two spots that need attention, and these may often be removed by rubbing gently with a clean cloth and hot water. If the baby has spilled orange juice, try rubbing with a cloth wet with hot water. Chocolate spots will usually react to a little lukewarm water.

Lamp Shades

Most lamp shades, nowadays can be washed. Composition or parchment ones can be wiped off with a damp cloth. Silk shades that are sewed to the frame may be washed. Of course you must remove any fancy trimmings or metallic braids before washing. If the bindings are glued on, tack them into place or they will naturally come off during the washing. Douse the shade up and down in a tub of lukewarm soapsuds, using a soft brush if necessary on any very bad spots, rinse quickly in lukewarm water, and dry as quickly as possible to prevent the wire frame from rusting.

A State College physician and then left without identifying himself, it is claimed.

Later the injured boy was brought to the Centre County Hospital, where he is recovering from a fractured right arm and numerous abrasions.

State Motor Police at Pleasant Gap last week filed against Hoy's charge of operating a car during a suspension of his operating license. Arraigned before Justice of the Peace A. R. Houser, at Rockview, Hoy pleaded guilty and was bound over for his appearance at Court. He is reported to have admitted driving a car on the evening of the accident but claims he was not driving when the car struck the Dreese youth.

used for lengthy imprisonments, nor for the custody of a large number of prisoners since "there is a maximum cell capacity for only six convicts and no accommodations whatever for women."

He added that to take care of such convicts it would be necessary to enlarge the quarters at Rockview and to maintain a continuous death watch, which would entail a special appropriation.

Reno also said that transfer of convicts to Rockview in many cases would make it impossible for relatives to visit doomed men, since they and their relatives are often without funds and relatives might be unable to afford a trip to Rockview if they lived far from the prison.

Over $30,000 Is Grossed at Sale

the sale was estimated to have been attended by more than 3000 persons.

As an indication of the prices brought for the livestock, a herd bull was knocked down for $1,500. The highest cow went for $500 and a calf under three months old was sold for $150. Another calf, so young that it had to be carried to the auction block, brought $25. Grade cows went for as high as $185.

The farm implements, some of which were brand new, and some used only one or two seasons, brought excellent prices, some pieces going for their usual retail price.

No real estate was sold, the entire amount representing sales of livestock and implements. The auctioneers were L. Frank Mayes, of Leont; E. M. Smith, of State College, and E. M. Granger, Jr., of Sparks, Md.

Another sale of unusual size will be held on Wednesday, March 20,
