BOOK REVIEW

"Ascent of Death," the memoirs of the late Robert G. Elliott, former official executor for Pennsylvania and four other states, is an interesting history of an unusual profession and at the same time a strong sermon against capital punishment.

PRESIDENT

We had thought that Governor James was definitely out of the running as a Presidential candidate, but we see by the papers that his supporters still think there's a chance.

PEACE MOVES

The European jockeying now going on under the head of "peace plans," leaves this corner a bit jittery. Someone is going to be sold down the river, and the further the United States keeps its nose out of the mess, the less likely that we'll be the one who gets the knockout blow.

ROAD BARRIER

Much discussion is going the rounds concerning the State's action last week in sidetracking the construction of the proposed new road between Bellefonte and State College, which was scheduled to be built this spring.

RUMORS

Rumors have it that members of the local School Board contemplate three complaints against school officials. They are: that there was too much delay in giving an alarm at the time of the high school fire; that school officials split orders of more than $300 so that bids would not have to be advertised for, and that school officials gave permission to a janitor to remove some wood wainscoting and hardwood flooring from one of the basement rooms of the ruined building.

RADIO MENACE

During the past ten days two groups of Centre county youths have been brought before juvenile court on charges of robbery and thievery. In attempting to determine why the youths, most of them from good homes, turned to crime, the Court learned that two radio programs for youngsters had furnished the idea for their deeds.

LABOR UNIONS

Many persons upon hearing the term "Labor Union" immediately picture bearded bullies, with a bomb in one hand and a torch in the other. Nothing good, they imagine, can come from them. The other day we heard a discussion on unions which seemed eminently fair. A Chamber of Commerce, it was pointed out, is a union of the business people of a community. Lawyers, medical men, dentists, and in fact persons in the same lines of business everywhere have their associations, which are nothing more than unions. The purpose of a union is to work for the betterment of all members of the group, and, the speaker concluded, there is no reason why the laboring man should be frowned upon for wishing to have his own association. The prime essential in any union, whether it be for professional people or laborers, is good leadership, he commented.

COLLEGE DEBATORS URGE RE-ELECTION OF FDR

Resolutions approving the new deal and urging re-election of President Roosevelt were adopted by representatives of 20 colleges at the Pennsylvania debaters convention at State College, last week. Other resolutions approved suggested expansion of reciprocal trade agreements and recommended that the Dies committee investigating un-American activities be replaced by a bi-partisan committee appointed by the senate and composed of persons who were not senators. Samuel Rodgers of the University of Pittsburgh was elected president of the debaters.
