Record Crowd at Cooking School

she was cooking for the audience—which really would make a very large party. But she explained that with the help of her modern electric kitchen she thought she could do the cooking without tiring either herself or the audience. And the fact that she finished the program with her dress still fresh, and every curl in place proved that modern kitchen equipment has taken most of the work out of cooking.

Before Mrs. Bathgate could start her cooking, however, she was interrupted by her assistant, Mrs. Le-mabel Parry, whose troubles have always been a source of amusement to their audiences. This time Mrs. Parry was in difficulties about her wiring and came to Mrs. Bathgate to borrow a fuse and an iron so that she could go on with her work.

Then Mrs. Bathgate went back to her program, most of which was concerned with baking. She baked pies and cakes, rolls and tea rings—whisking them together in less time than it takes to tell. She popped things in and out of ovens and roasters, ending with a grand finale of four different products baked at one time and temperature in the oven of an electric range.

Everyday Meals

Mrs. Bathgate started her second class this afternoon, by talking about her planned all-electric kitchen. She pointed out the smooth streamlined appliances and told how each one played a part in work saving.

Mrs. Bathgate said she was going to cook in her model kitchen just as she, or any housewife, would cook in such a kitchen at home.

At this point, Mrs. Parry dropped in to tell Mrs. Bathgate enthusiastically about her new electric water heater—that silent partner in the home that is so necessary to comfort even though it is seldom seen. Mrs. Parry said she was even anxious to wash dishes now that she had plenty of hot water!

Then Mrs. Bathgate continued her program saying that she called it "Saving the Day" since it has been planned to help the homemaker with her everyday family cooking and also save a good part of the day for those things she always wanted to do and never had time for.

Reversing the usual order of the day, the program started with dinners, one of which was based on a very inexpensive cut of meat which Mrs. Bathgate made into a savory, tender dish.

Mrs. Bathgate suggested one-pro-cess meals to conserve time and energy—and economize on heat. The ladies were amazed at the quantities of food that went into the ovens and roasters—and even into a steam skillet for a one-dish meal.

Lunches and breakfasts came last on this program and Mrs. Bathgate gave even such ordinary foods as cereals, dried fruits, and bacon and eggs, a new twist. In fact, she fried bacon and eggs with a nonchalance which made the audience gasp!

While all the dishes were simple ones, Mrs. Bathgate showed how to give them "oomph" with the right seasoning and a bit of trimming so that when company came you could, as she said, "always put your best food forward."

Quiz

Mrs. Bathgate was kept busy after the regular cooking sessions answering questions for the audience, and later, after the prizes had been distributed, in explaining the features of her colorful kitchen to the ladies who came up to inspect it.

After all those delicious baking odors had been wafted out to the audience, rivalry was keen as to who would take home the prizes.

Decorating Forum

The third and final class of The Centre Democrat Homemaking School will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock. The lecturer for this class is Mrs. Sara McCarthy, who is an experienced decorator and lighting specialist, has an extremely interesting program to offer.

Mrs. McCarthy will "bring a living room to life" which she claims she does "without the aid of mirrors." All joking aside, this decorative and lighting class is full of helpful solutions to the problem of making a living room look smartly comfortable no matter how small the budget.

Mrs. McCarthy will let her audience in on such secrets as how to plan a color scheme and work it out into a charming room, how to select wall paper and draperies, why some rooms look dull at night, and how to keep everyone in the family from wanting the same easy chair.

Here is a resume of her program:

- "New Rooms for Old"
- 1. Menu Planning and Meal Planning.
- 2. The ABC's of Decoration. A simple analysis of how to plan a room making use of the "tools" with which the decorator works.
- 3. Color and Fabrics.
- 4. Furniture and Room arrangement.
- 5. Lighting. A discussion of light that insures comfort and beauty in the home... the Science of Seeing ... safeguarding the family's eyesight... measuring light.

6. "A Living Room Comes to Life." A dramatic presentation of how a typical living room can bloom with beauty and be as comfortable as an old shoe.

7. Before and After Views of Rooms. Slides in color showing typical rooms before and after modernization.

"Ghost" Speaker Heard at Rally

ject of politics was a minor theme. Dr. White, not billed as a humorist; claiming to be no politician; and not a minister, combined all three in what he termed a business man's view of life in general.

Contending that politics should be run like a business, the speaker declared that the crying need of the day in all walks of life and among all classes of people are principle and industry.

He defined principle as being ordinary everyday honesty of mind and opinion, in addition to honesty in money matters. By industry he referred to the constructive activity of the individual.

"Work when you work!" he said. "That doesn't mean you have to put in 12 hours a day and a couple extra hours on Saturday."

He declared that 80 per cent of automobiles driven in the larger cities of Pennsylvania at night are driven by "roosters" from about 18 to 23 years of age who never earned a dollar in their lives.

He called for strengthening of family life, not only in families but in the Democratic party as well.

Time was, he pointed out, when families discussed their problems at home, and presented a united front on the outside. Now everything is based on the individual—who sometimes hasn't the ability to arrive at a clear understanding of things unaided, or who is influenced by every person with whom he comes in contact.

Comparing the primary elections with a family council, Dr. White declared that after the "council" is over, the "family" should go out in the world presenting a united front and with all petty grievances forgotten. The lies, deceit, the broken promises, the dishonesty and the other evils which have brought about Europe's present plight, he said, and which keeps the government of this nation in a turmoil, could all be avoided by a simple adherence to a story in the Old Testament.

"We don't need thousands and thousands of pages of laws and regulations," he declared. "The ten short rules inscribed on the two tablets of stone are all we need."

Everything today is evaluated in terms of gold and silver, he continued. The fact that a man makes a fortune in five years seems to be more important than the fact that a man raises a family of seven children in 25 years and sweats to do it. We ignore the real things in life—the things that really matter, he said.

Dr. White declared that he has no time for those who are always crying over their "tough luck" and misfortunes. This nation has never experienced a widespread catastrophe, such as a flood, famine or pestilence. "God has not failed us," he said. "We have failed ourselves."

We have storage warehouses bursting with wheat; other stores overflowing with cotton, supplies of all kinds in full and plenty, he continued. "And we haven't the brains to get the surplus to the hungry and the needy," he declared.

We are going through what history will record as an era of great improvement in a time of great trouble, the speaker went on. We have made and will make mistakes, but we haven't given up trying to find the right answer. What more can you expect of any man—or any nation?" he asked.

Referring to the "good old days" when communications were primitive and when a golden-tongued orator visiting a community once a year could solidify public opinion on practically any issue until he returned with a fresh dose of oratory, Dr. White declared that times have changed. We all get several newspapers a day. The radio, the movies, the news magazines and other means of expression bring the truth to all people. People are beginning to understand, and to think for themselves. And because of that fact, it is impossible to practice deceit on a wholesale scale. Honesty is daily becoming more necessary in the conduct of government.

Referring briefly to President Roosevelt, Dr. White declared that the present time is the first occasion in history that people are blaming the ills of the nation on one man. Heretofore "the administration" has been blamed, he said. Now the critics put the burden on the shoulders of the President.

He declared he believes the reason for this is because the President, by birth and family ties, should naturally have been aligned with the "haves" rather than the "have nots." He should not be interested in the plight of the common people, in labor, in relief, in social security and in the many other aims of the present government. Because he "has taken these causes, he is considered in the light of a traitor, Dr. White said.

William Litke, of the law firm of Fleming & Litke, Bellefonte, presided as toastmaster at the dinner and during the course of the evening introduced the following guests: Charles F. Hipple and Fred C. Mensch, County Commissioners; Harry A. Corman, Register; Swengel Smith, Deserion, Probation and Parole Officer; Philip H. Johnston, County Solicitor; Albert Mingle, Centre County Jones campaign manager; Boyd Vonada, Centre County Guffey campaign manager; Miss Maude Miller, vice chairman of the county; a Mrs. Phillips, president of the Blair County Woman's Democratic organization; Miss Edna Marsden, Clearfield County Treasurer; Dr. Frank K. White, Phillipsburg, candidate for delegate to the National Convention; Mrs. Lucy B. Merrell, Phillipsburg, also a candidate for delegate to the National Convention; John W. Decker, Spring Mills, candidate for the General Assembly; and Alton Briggs, Blair county, alternate delegate to the National Convention.

Democratic county chairman, Henry A. Brockenhoff, of Bellefonte, explained that his refusal to be a candidate for re-election to that office resulted from physical necessity. He declared that he is thoroughly in accord with the National and State programs of the party, and spoke most highly of the local ticket.

William M. Aukerman, of Blair county, candidate for congress from this district, declared that he believes he is fitted for that office through his experience during two terms as Assemblyman and from his knowledge of legislative procedure and law. His record at Harrisburg, he declared, reveals that he has consistently favored legislation for better social and labor conditions. If elected, he promised to open offices in Centre and Clearfield counties, and to be in those offices part of the time when not in Washington.

Entertainment consisted of several numbers by the Penn State Girls' Varsity Quartette, and by two acts from the home talent show "The Elks Frolics," presented recently by the Bellefonte Elks Club at the State theatre. The acts, given under the direction of Mrs. Alberta Krader, were "Happy Go Lucky Days," by Peggy Smith and Mary Hackett, and "Faithful Forever," by Carolyn Kachik and Rosalie Miller. Miss Ann Weber acted as pianist for both acts.
