YOUR HEALTH

An army of 2,000,000 boys and girls will move into summer camps this year. There are between 5,000 and 6,000 summer camps throughout the United States.

The normal child thrives and improves on it. There are other children, however, who should not be sent to camp without the approval of the family physician.

Aside from its physical advantages, the summer camp should also simulate the growth processes of the child mentally, socially and emotionally.

The child must be keen to go to camp—not overly persuaded by parents or friends who may poorly conceal a desire to rid themselves of responsibility for the child during the summer.

There are camps for all classes and conditions of children. A camp should be selected which fits in with the financial, as well as social, position of the family.
