More and more doctors are practicing Preventive Medicine, which is nothing more nor less than the PREVENTION OF DISEASE. As knowledge of definite causes increases, disease falls back before the advance of scientific medicine. What has become of Smallpox, which was for centuries the scourge of the world? Vaccination is practically wiping it out.
What has become of those great fatal epidemics of Yellow Fever and Diphtheria? Scientific medicine has all but eliminated the one, and will gradually eliminate the other as the public co-operates more fully toward prevention.

From the time of Hippocrates (the Greek physician who lived about 350 B. C.) until a comparatively short time ago, the physician devoted practically all his time to curing disease victories remain to be won, but, as you read this, scientific men of medicine are laboring to conquer those yet unconquered diseases. DONALD R.

More recent victories of Scientific Medicine in the fight against sickness are discovery of Insulin for control of diabetes, and discovery of liver and ventriculin for pernicious anemia. Many
