Electric Water Heater Is Praised By Louisa

By LOUISA HOPKINS

It's wonderful on the farm—for a while. The first few days I'm really enthusiastic, but along about the end of the week, the pumping of water to wash dishes and faces and for drinking becomes laborious as well as tiresome.

Then when Monday comes, well, I give up.

Like my conveniences, and recently while visiting where they had an electric hot water heater I realized just how convenient living in the country with the convenience of a heater really was.

Warm weather makes increasing demands on the household hot water supply. The family washing becomes heavier as father spends his evenings in the garden and the children spend more time outdoors. Open windows mean frequent washing of curtains and draperies, and summer temperatures bring increased demands for hot baths.

Heated Water

Yet nobody likes to keep a kitchen range piping hot all the time, or to keep running water down stairs to start up the basement heater, no matter how great the hot water demand. Summer discounts are sufficient of themselves, without increasing them unnecessarily. The problem, then, becomes one of a plentiful supply of hot water, available on an instant's notice, as comfortably and conveniently as possible.

The problem of hot water for domestic purposes is as old as civilization. The Cave Man dropped hot stones into water-filled cavities in the rock. Early American Indians wove baskets so fine that they would hold water, and placed hot stones in them for the same purpose. Then mankind had learned the use of metal, water could be heated in kettles over flame, and his method has come down through succeeding generations to the present day, varying only in the source of the flame and the type of container.

Electric Heater

Within the last few years, however, engineers have shown us how to heat water without any flame whatever. Electric coils immersed directly in the water itself heat it to any desired temperature for household purposes and keep it hot at all times.

The modern electric water heater is constructed upon this principle:

A tank, thoroughly insulated so that no heat can escape, is fitted with electrical heating units inside, which in turn, are controlled by thermostats. When the tank is filled with water piped from the regular household supply, and the electric current is connected, the electric heating units quickly raise the temperature of the water. The electricity is then automatically shut off, and the insulation keeps the water hot for hours. As hot water is drawn off, cold water takes its place in the tank. This lowers the temperature, and the current is automatically switched on by the thermostat until the water is once more hot.

Economical

It's economical, it's efficient, automatic, and safe, and it's as convenient as you can possibly imagine. Once the heater is installed, there is nothing to it except to turn the hot water faucet whenever you want hot water. There's always plenty of it the instant you want it, and all the hot water you can use at any time and for any purpose.

The new heaters come in cabinet models which fit in perfectly with the rest of your kitchen equipment. Some of them are just the height of the kitchen work counter, and serve as a continuation of it. Others stand higher, but are square so as to fit into recesses and corners. Round models may be placed in the basement, usually directly below the kitchen sink, so as to save unnecessary plumbing connections.

C. W.—Why do flowers smell sweeter after a rain?
Ans.—In dry weather the surface of the petals of the flower becomes tough, and all the little holes close up so that the odoriferous oils cannot get out very well into the air. After a rain the little holes in the petal surface are more widely open and the smell is more noticeable.

R. Y.—What is the speed of radio sounds?
Ans.—The speed of radio waves is about the same speed of light—186,000 miles a second. To all practical purposes this speed is considered instantaneous.

P. V.—Why does fire give out a yellow glow light when you put salt in it?
Ans.—This is because salt contains the chemical element "sodium." If sodium vapor is heated very hot it glows with a strong yellow light. When you put salt in the fire some of the sodium is vaporized by the heat. The vapor gets hotter still in the flames and thus produces its characteristic glow.

G. J.—What is fog?
Ans.—Fog is simply cloud close to the earth. It is formed whenever moist air gets cooled enough to condense its water molecules into small droplets. They are so small they evaporate in the sunlight, and usually do not condense into water.

51 Members of Clan Attend Gathering July 4; Choose Place For 1941 Event

The annual Gingery Reunion was held July 4, at Elk Haven Park, which is located about 2 miles west of Port Matilda.

A short business meeting was held in the afternoon, which was called to order by President, Harvey Silver. The meeting was opened with prayer by Mr. Russell Weaver. The minutes of the previous year were read and approved. All officers were retained for another year.

It was decided to hold our next reunion for 1941, at Stephens Park, Tyrone.

The five Gingery sisters and brothers were all present. There being no further business to take care of, we all stood, joined hands forming a circle and sang "Blest Be The Tie." Mrs. Elwood Steele pronounced the benediction.

swelled membership in the plan to 26,726. Amounts paid in hospital bills for these members now totals more than $80,000.

In June alone a record number of hospital cases cost the plan $9,686. Vying for top honors in numbers were tonsil operations and babies.

Dr. Fred G. Carter, president of the American Hospital Association, which has given its seal of approval to Blue Cross hospital service plans, has pointed out that since the advent not more than ten years ago of hospital service plans, the average stay of patients in the hospital has been decreasing, which may mean, he indicates, that people are learning to use hospitals not as places of last resort, but as proper places to go in times of illness or injury.

A number of people apparently have the unshakable belief that a man, to be a murderer, must show visible signs of being such. He must have horns sprouting from his head. He should be pock-marked and have yellow tusks for teeth. He should drool and have talons on his fingertips. It might help if he had a forked tail and gibbered a little. To such trusting people the fact that a sane and personable man who eats with a fork and shaves every day might have committed murder is unthinkable.
