Lessons In English

Words Often Misused

Do not say, "Everybody enjoyed themselves." Say, "Everybody enjoyed himself."

Do not say, "I was there some five years ago." Say, "I was there about five years ago."

Do not say, "My father forbids me from going." Say, "My father forbids my going," or "forbids me to go."

Do not say, "We saw them several weeks back." Say, "We saw them several weeks ago."

Do not write, "I have your letter of October 1, and contents noted. The fact that you are answering is evidence that the contents have been noted."

Do not say, "That is an actual fact." Omit actual. Fact means "the quality of being actual."

Decollete. Pronounce da-kol-ta both as in day, o as in of, accent second syllable.

Contractor. Preferred pronunciation is with accent on second syllable.

Muskelmel. Pronounce first syllable musel, not mush.

Bivouac. Pronounce biv-oo-ak as in bi, oo as in book, as in at, accent first syllable.

Fatigue. Pronounce fa-tee, a as in ask unstressed, e as in tea, accent last syllable.

Summoned. Pronounce as apell-ed, sum-und, not sumund, often heard.

Words Often Misspelled

Serge (a worried fabric); surge (a rolling swell of water). Octopus, to not, to, Bawl (to cry out); not ball. Aquarium, aq; acquaintance, aq; Surveyor; observe the three vowels. Layer (one thickness); lair (a bed).

Use a word three times and it is yours. Let us increase our vocabulary by mastering one word each day. Words for this lesson:

PROBENSITY; a natural inclination or bent. "No evil propensity of the human heart is so powerful that it may not be subdued by discipline."—Seneca.

APOTHEOSIS; exaltation, as of a person or ideal. (Pronounce ap-oth-ee-sis, first o as in of, second o as in no, principal accent on fourth syllable). "He had entitled the story 'Adventure,' and it was the apotheosis of adventure."—Jack London.

MISANTHROPE; a hater of mankind. (Pronounce mis-an-thrope, o as in throw, accent first syllable).

DIGRESSION; departure from a subject or its main course of treatment. "Digressions" incoherently as in the life, the soul of reading—"Serene."

LOCONISM; vigorous, brief expression; terse style. (Pronounce lak-o-nizm, a as in lack, accent first syllable). "His speech was praised for its loconism."

YOUR HEALTH

A recent news photograph showed three generations of a prominent Pennsylvania family at the oars of a college racing scull. What is grandfather doing rowing a racing boat?

It seems he had been on the college crew in his youth and still likes to scull a fast oar. It has always been understood that strenuous effort of a crew racing is hard on the heart. People are of the opinion that marathon racing and similar strenuous exercises strain the heart muscles or cause the heart to fail.

This is refuted by present-day students of the heart. They insist that the healthy heart of the marathon runner or of the oarsman is not strained enormously by his strenuous exercise. There is some enlargement of the heart of an athlete over that of the sedentary persons—but nothing to indicate damage to the organ.

Some athletes have suffered from heart disease and there have been cases in which racehorses have died with greatly enlarged hearts. But in all of these instances, it is pointed out, the heart was not normal and healthy before the strenuous exercise was begun. The average rate of the heart beat in man is 70 per minute. Muscular training has a tendency to reduce this rate, many athletes having pulse rates of between 50 and 60. At birth, the heart beat is about 139 per minute this rate diminishing progressively to adolescence, increasing slightly in old age.

Strenuous exercise, properly managed, does not affect the healthy heart. Every growing youth should have a careful examination to determine his heart condition before going out for football, basketball or any other form of strenuous exercise.

Fall Lamp Styles

Not only good design, but good light, is assured by these modern 18th Century lamps which have been built over the specifications set up by the Illuminating Engineering Society.

Have you seen the attractive new lamps that are appearing in the stores this fall. They've been designed in many different styles that will fit right in with almost any type of furniture.

Beauty of design and efficient light have at last been smoothly combined. In the past this has always been a problem for the woman who found she had to choose between a decorative lamp in harmony with the room, and one built to give adequate light.

If you are confronted with this problem—now that you are fixing up the house for the winter—ask to see the new I. E. S. lamps. These lamps, while they have been built according to the specifications for better light set up by the Illuminating Engineering Society, have been enhanced by good design, workmanship and materials. There are many attractive period designs planned to lighten the mood of a room.

They are scaled to suit modern furnishings and rooms, and help to create an air of harmony. And you can get these lamps in matched pairs—a floor and table model—or all three if you want to keep all the lamps in the room keyed to one style and color.

But no matter what style your room or the lamp you select, be sure it wears the I. E. S. tag.
