

Card Players Brush up on Lighting

The enthusiastic card player who's brushing up on the rules of the game now that fall activities are at hand, might find it a bright idea, also, to brush up on his home lighting. So suggest the lighting specialists.

Playing the wrong card isn't always to be blamed on ignorance of the rules, they point out. Sometimes it's a matter of dim lighting or of a confusing glare on shiny cards.

The hostess who makes it a point to provide attractive decks of cards, nice tables and tempting candies, needs to give a thought to the lighting, too.

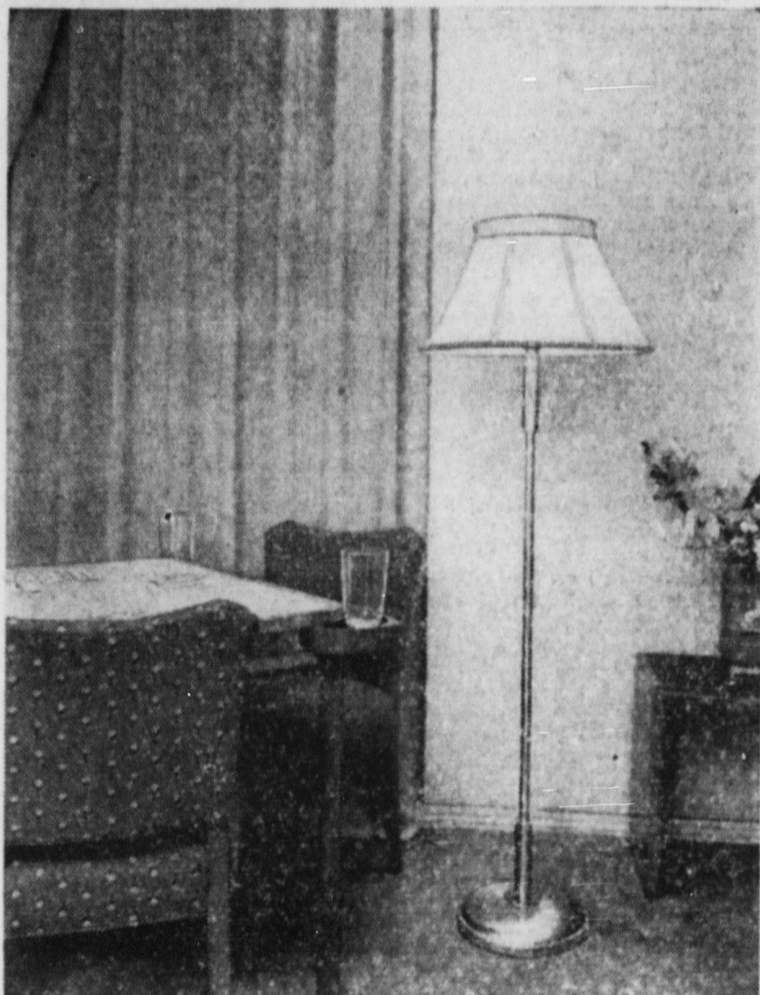

There will probably be a dull evening ahead if she pulls up to the table a lamp whose light serves only two players at best. Worse still is the lamp shade which falls to cover the raw light from the bulbs. The resulting glare on the dummy hand makes players twist and fidget.

Or perhaps the bulbs are woefully small. Before the evening is over the players' energy will have seeped away with their efforts to see.

Lighting specialists, who have considered the needs of persons at play as well as at work, have given the following advice: for your games or hobbies provide a good lamp which will give not only enough light for easy seeing, but the right kind of light which is free from glare.

Their recommendations point to lamps made now by approximately sixty manufacturers over the specifications of the Illuminating Engineering Society. Some of these I. E. S. lamps are ideal for the game table. They give a light as soft as that on a shaded porch on a summer's day—adequate smooth light which distributes itself impartially to all four contestants and casts no uncomplimentary shadow lines on faces.

For the bridge table select an I. E. S. floor lamp with a two-fluorescent bulb. This bulb allows three different levels of light. A practical point about a lamp of this kind, holding a 100-200-300 watt bulb, is that it is a major lamp and not a small

It's not so easy to hide an ace in one's sleeve—or to pull out the wrong card either when seeing is made easier and games more relaxing with good light. The lighting experts recommend scientifically designed ones like this I. E. S. model . . . in trim modernistic style.

Other lamps in the room need not be disrupted from their locations when the game table is set up. The large floor lamp will do a man-size job sending light up to the ceiling as well as down to the cards, thus eliminating harsh shadows. There's less danger of trumping a partner's ace with an I. E. S. lamp of this type, and relaxation becomes easier.
